BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2193) to retire disabled officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to call the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs to the urgency of some legislation to relieve the active-list of the Army from quite a number of officers who are now disabled, and who are eligible to retirement, but can not be placed on the retired-list because the present retired-list of four hundred is full. This is a special bill, providing for the retirement of some sixty or seventy officers who have been recommended by boards to be placed upon the retired-list. I will furnish the Committee on Military Affairs with a list of the officers and the dates and the number of years they have been absent from their commands on account of their disabilities. It seems to me that such a measure is in the interest of the service, and certainly an act of justice to the subordinate officers who are deprived of rank and emolument by reason of these superior officers being absent from their commands.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 2194) for the erection of a public building at Haverhill, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask that the memorial accompanying the bill be read, and referred, with the bill, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the memorial which accompanies the bill be read. If there be no objection it will be read.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States, assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Washington city and the United States, recognize the fact that the capital city of the nation has been laid out on a plan unsurpassed for beauty and magnificence, and now this plan is threatened with complete destruction owing to various subdivisions of land without the city limits into narrow and irregular streets, so that to-day every avenue is chopped off at the boundary, and not a single street is extended into the county in conformity with the present existing plan of the city. The rectification of this growing evil is imperatively demanded, and even now will cost a large sum of money, increasing with every year's delay. This lack of uniform subdivision impedes greatly the growth of the suburbs and obstructs the extension of street railroads into the county.

Your petitioners respectfully pray that your honorable bodies will take such immediate steps as in your judgment will continue the present grand plan of our capital in the extension of its streets and avenues. And ever pray, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and memorial will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DALLAS, TEX., March 4, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I write to say that I have been visiting officially the first and fourth collection districts of Texas, and have met the respective collectors of these districts, the Hon. S. B. Cooper and Hon. R. M. Henderson, and found them to be exemplary officials as well as courteous gentlemen. They (in short) are good enough to be Republicans, and if you can aid their confirmation you will not only contribute to benefit the civil administration, but will render a personal service to me.

Very respectfully,

L. A. THRASHER.

Hon. J. J. INGALLS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GALVESTON, TEX., January 1, 1886.

DEAR GENERAL: I am an old soldier is my excuse for presuming to write you. You have before the Senate for confirmation the name of S. B. Cooper as collector of internal revenue of the first district of Texas.

One of our old comrades, Col. W. H. Sinclair, late assistant adjutant-general on General David Stanley's staff, was removed to give place to this party. The honorable Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated to the agent of the Associated Press that Sinclair was removed "in the interest of reform and for the good of the service," and this was spread throughout the Union by the press. The fact is that Sinclair had one of the best records in the Internal Revenue Department. Ask Green B. Raum.

This man Cooper, in order to raise a bond, came to Galveston and attempted to blackmail the merchants here into going on his bond by threatening to remove the office to Houston (50 miles away) unless they made him his bond. They wouldn't be blackmailed, especially as he was known as a poker player and a man who drank too much, and so he went to Houston and raised his bond by promising to bring the office there. He got permission to remove the office, but through the protests of our merchants his order was countermanded. Protests were filed both with the Commissioner and Secretary of the Treasury. If you will call for them, I think you will find that these merchants charge blackmail, or words to that effect, on his part. Sinclair don't want the place, but it would be a satisfaction to your comrades here to see an old soldier vindicated, and it is only right in the interest of good government that this party should not be confirmed.

Trusting that you will see to this, or place the matter in charge of the right Republican Senator,

I remain,

YOUR COMRADE.

General JOHN A. LOGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

The bill was read at length.

WILLIAM M'GARRAHAN.

Mr. CLARDY, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 3918, a bill (H. R. 8084) to submit to the Court of Claims for adjudication the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande tract of land in the State of California, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

House bill No. 3918 was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The substitute bill, under the rule, will be referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMMOND. Why should not that bill go where the rules would take it?

Mr. CLARDY. The bill does not propose, either directly or indirectly, to appropriate money. It provides a contingency, however, in which the Government may be liable for a considerable sum of money.

Mr. HAMMOND. Still it is a mere private bill and appropriates no money the gentleman states.

Mr. CLARDY. It is a private bill and appropriates no money.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then it should go to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CLARDY. But I have said it provides a contingency in which the Government may be liable for a considerable sum of money. I do not see any reason why this bill should not be considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, as the more important public bills must be considered under the rules of the House; and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the Chair having stated that under the rules it would go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to refer private bills to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. If the House chooses to do so, the Chair thinks it may.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. If this bill, instead of being placed on the Private Calendar, is sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, then can it not be called up in the consideration hour and thereby get precedence over private bills?

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House as to that is very plain. It provides that when committees are called in the hour for the consideration of bills they may be taken from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union or from the House Calendar.

Mr. MORRISON. The reference of a bill does not change its character.

Mr. HAMMOND. But it changes the opportunity of getting it up for consideration.

The question being taken on Mr. CLARDY'S motion, there were—ayes 47, noes 54.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and will be printed.

Mr. DANIEL. I object.

INDIAN COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill assigned for consideration during this hour.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6973) to provide for the appointment of a commission to inspect and report on the condition of Indians, Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has sixteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. This bill, I submit, properly belongs to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and should be considered there.

The SPEAKER. But the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, by unanimous consent of the House, when it was up the other day for consideration.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I was not aware of that. Then I would like to understand from the gentleman in charge of the bill what arrangements he proposes about the time to be occupied and the division of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no further time occupied over the bill. This is the second hour, and the subject has been somewhat discussed. Unless it is disposed of during this hour, it goes over indefinitely.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I regard this as a very important bill, and one that the House should understand. We should have some time to discuss it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are quite a number of amendments pending by unanimous consent; and all I desire to add to what has been already said is that the measure is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and suggested by the President of the United States in his last annual message. The object of the bill is to avoid a large number of commissions which have been proposed, which it is believed would create great confusion in the adjustment of the Indian question. It is proposed to have one commission of high character instead of a number—one commission of high character and standing, composed of three gentlemen designated from the Army and three from civil life.

I think the gentleman from Iowa will see that if the bill should be thrown open to extended debate as he proposes it would only result in the defeat of the measure. I therefore feel compelled to call the previous question on the bill and pending amendments, adding further, in accordance with the agreement made some days ago, a motion to strike out——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman to demand the previous question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; except that I wish to interpose a motion to strike out all of the fifth section after line 16. I will state that the portion proposed to be stricken out appropriates the sum of $25,000 for the survey of lands to be allotted to the Indians in severalty. That is an appropriation provided for by an amendment of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill carrying that sum, so that it is not necessary to be retained in this bill, and it more properly belongs to the general appropriation bill. I therefore enter a motion, under the agreement made by unanimous consent some days ago that motions might be pending, to strike out all after line 16, in the fifth section of the bill. How much time does the gentleman from Iowa desire?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This bill is one of the most important bills pending now before the House concerning the Indian question. To my mind it is a very pernicious measure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not yielding to the gentleman now to make a speech. The gentleman desired to debate, and I simply asked how much time he wanted.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I am prefacing a remark so that I can answer the gentleman's questions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I decline to yield for that.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I propose to ask the House to vote down the gentleman's motion for the previous question if he does not yield to me for an explanation and to state my objections to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will state how much time he desires I will yield him any reasonable amount of time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I can not properly discuss this bill or explain it to the House under one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the gentleman's own instance the bill was laid aside when formerly before the House. I was anxious to accommodate the gentleman; but it is manifest that if the House does not see proper to sustain the demand for the previous question the bill is postponed. If the gentleman wishes five or ten minutes, I will yield that time to him.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Indiana has been very kind, and I make no complaint. But after a careful examination of the bill I think it should not pass without a thorough discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will ten minutes answer the gentleman's purpose?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly not. This bill puts the whole Indian question in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and I will not make any agreement by which such a measure shall be hurried through the House. It should have been thoroughly examined in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Without a proper understanding of what was in the bill unanimous consent was obtained to have it considered in the morning hour. That unanimous consent should not have been given. I for one will not consent that this bill shall be hurried through the House in this way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Iowa declines to take such time as I have at my disposal I have no other course to pursue except to call the previous question. I leave the matter with the House after making this remark only——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at this moment. This measure, as I have already said, comes before the House with the approval of the Interior Department. It has been very carefully considered by the House select committee on the subject to which it refers. It has already been debated and the House can determine its merits.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I care not whether it comes from the Secretary of the Interior or not. The Secretary of the Interior has no right to legislate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is taking up my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). Does the gentleman from Indiana decline to yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I decline to yield.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is very carefully drawn, as every gentleman is aware; it has been pending now for weeks, and it was postponed at the instance of the gentleman himself [Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa] until to-day, and the matter is now with the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It was postponed in order that there might be an opportunity of examining the bill. That was the only reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. The bill provides for referring to Congress every question that may arise where legislation or the modification of a treaty becomes necessary. It is a bill to protect the interests of the Indians and at the same time settle the numerous and important questions of our Indian relations.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to yield to me for a few minutes, that I may explain an amendment which I desire to offer to the first section of the bill in regard to the organization of the committee, and which has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think ten minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not ask so much time as that.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Well, say five minutes—sufficient to explain the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to yield to me in order to explain the amendment which, at his suggestion and invitation, I have had printed in the RECORD. The amendment will be found on page 3516 of the RECORD. This bill, as reported by the committee, proposes a commission, to consist of six members, three of whom may be detailed from the Army and the remainder from civil life or from the Indian service in the Interior Department.

Mr. DUNHAM. That includes members of Congress?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, members of Congress. We have at the present time a board of Indian commissioners, which has been in existence I think since 1869, consisting of ten members. It is what was known originally as the Quaker board, and was appointed through the instrumentality of President Grant. That board has been doing very excellent service in a limited sphere.

At the present time its labors are confined principally to the inspection of Indian supplies, purchases for the Indian service, visiting the Indian reservations, and making recommendations to the Secretary of the Interior. That board is still in existence. There is nothing in this bill which purports to do away with it in any manner.

Now, if we pass this bill we shall have the spectacle of that old board of Indian commissioners (consisting of ten members), of which General Clinton B. Fish is president, and General Whittlesey is secretary, and also this new board of Indian commissioners, both boards running to some extent parallel, having in charge like interests, with jurisdictions to some extent overlapping. The object of the amendment which I propose is simply to consolidate these two boards, so as practically to do away with the old one, leaving but one board of Indian commissioners, which shall be charged with the jurisdiction that would belong to both as they would exist under this bill.

The amendment which I propose is simply to the first section of the bill, and would carry with it, of course, an amendment of the title. The amendment provides that—

> The President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to reorganize the board of Indian commissioners, so as to make it to consist of seven persons, two of whom may be detailed from the officers of the Army, who shall report to the Secretary of the Interior for duty, the other members to be appointed from the existing board, from civil life, or detailed from officers in the service of the Department of the Interior. And when said board of Indian commissioners shall be so appointed, the organization and functions of the present board of Indian commissioners shall cease and determine. It shall be the duty of the said reorganized board of Indian commissioners to perform all duties heretofore intrusted to and performed by the board of Indian commissioners; and they shall inspect all goods and supplies purchased for the Indian service, and advise the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to the purchase of such goods and supplies. It shall also be the duty of said commissioners, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to inspect from time to time, as he may require, the condition of the Indians of the various tribes and bands on the different reservations under the care, control, or jurisdiction of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to yield me two or three minutes more.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the time. The gentleman's amendment is pending.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In one word, then (if the gentleman will permit), I will say that the scope of my amendment is to consolidate the two boards of Indian commissioners and make one, with jurisdiction covering the whole field.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Do you think it is possible to give this bill due consideration in the time allowed?

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is utterly impossible to give the bill proper consideration in the time allowed here.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is a very important bill. It covers the whole Indian question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I hope that will be voted down.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I hope the previous question will be voted down.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 39, noes 52.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 68.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not consume the hour by insisting on a further count.

So the previous question was not ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he ask the House to fix a day for the more deliberate consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall be very glad to comply with the gentleman's suggestion. The measure is a very important one; and gentleman can see the probabilities are that if this measure should not pass no measure to adjust and settle the Indian question can pass during the present Congress. Every member must recognize the importance of some measure for the adjustment of the Indian question. I therefore ask unanimous consent that some future day—I would say as late as the 25th of May, if it be thought advisable—be set apart for the consideration of this subject.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see that there exists any opposition to this bill, except as to details. Everybody agrees as to the necessity of some legislation on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House for consideration, and is subject to any parliamentary motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the bill be postponed——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will make no objection to the 25th of May.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the 20th of May.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I prefer the 25th.

Mr. RANDALL. That will give plenty of time, and will allow every member the opportunity to prepare and offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves that the further consideration of this bill be postponed, as the Chair understands, until the 25th of May.

Mr. WELLBORN. Will that interfere with prior orders?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is causing the Calendar to be examined——

Mr. DINGLEY. I notice that there is an assignment already made for the 25th of May.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to except prior orders.

Mr. WELLBORN. And revenue and general appropriation bills.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it proposed to confine the consideration of the bill to one day?

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition is to consider the bill until disposed of.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know whether there is anything in this proposed order which would except this bill from the rule requiring its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to postpone the consideration of the bill, which is a legitimate motion under the rules of the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to add to his motion the clause "and that the bill be considered in the Committee of the Whole House."

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that. The bill is now in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the 27th of May is set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to name some earlier day, subject to all prior orders.

Mr. WELLBORN. And to revenue and appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. And to revenue and general appropriation bills. I propose the 15th of May.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Saturday, the 15th of May, not to interfere with prior orders or with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This bill is one of such far-reaching importance that it ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be in order to refer it to the Committee of the Whole when we reach it.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it is already in the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I suggest it be agreed by unanimous consent that the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the question is submitted I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the pending motion is to postpone the consideration of this bill till a given day. Now, when the bill is reached at that time will it not, unless some further action is taken, be considered necessarily in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union has been discharged from the further consideration of this bill; but it is always in order, except when the previous question is pending, to move to recommit a bill either to a standing committee or to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNHAM. When the time arrives for the consideration of this bill, will it then be considered in the morning hour or will it have the whole day?

The SPEAKER. It will come up at any time the gentleman in charge of it may call it up, subject, however, to the question of consideration.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will it be confined to the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It is not confined to the morning hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the previous question on my motion.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUFFERERS BY OVERFLOW IN ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER. There are thirty minutes of this hour remaining. The Chair supposes, and makes the suggestion to the House, that as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] would have been entitled to sixty minutes to-day for business of his committee if it had not been interfered with by the other order, he will still be entitled to sixty minutes; thirty minutes to-day and thirty minutes to-morrow.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in Alabama; and pending that motion, I move that all general debate in Committee of the Whole on this bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. OATES. I desire to suggest to my colleague he withdraw the latter part of his motion. I had no disposition myself to consume the time of the House, but ten minutes is too short a time for debate.

Mr. FORNEY. I only propose to limit to ten minutes the general debate. There will be left under the rules the five-minute debate on amendments.

Mr. OATES. Under the ruling of the Chair we will have sixty minutes. I suggest to my colleague he limit the time of debate to fifty minutes.

Mr. FORNEY. I am afraid I can not agree to that. I insist on my motion to limit debate to ten minutes.

Mr. OATES demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 40.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and others. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. FORNEY and Mr. BEACH.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If general debate be limited to ten minutes, will not the proposition then be open to the five-minute debate?

The SPEAKER. . It will.

Mr. BAYNE. Under that you can have as long as you choose.

Mr. FORNEY. I withdraw the motion to limit debate to ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The question then recurs on the motion to go into committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is the point of no quorum withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama withdrew his motion to limit debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I insist on the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The motion to limit debate has been withdrawn, and the question now is on the motion to go into committee.

Mr. FORNEY demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 41.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

Mr. FORNEY. I believe this does not reach the Mississippi River or the waters of the Mississippi.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. FORNEY and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of the bill has expired, and it goes over.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, which announced the approval of the following bills and joint resolutions:

An act (H. R. 1151) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Lieut. William P. Randall a lieutenant-commander on the retired-list of the Navy, which bill was received by the President on April 5, 1886, and, not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, has become a law without his approval;

An act (H. R. 1270) to authorize the Mississippi River Water-Power and Boom Company of Brainerd, Minn., to construct a dam across the Mississippi River;

An act (H. R. 1297) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 18) for the further distribution of the report of the Public Land Commission; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 73) authorizing the printing of committee reports.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill:

Strike out "for" and insert "by;" so it will read: "Improving harbor at Oak Orchard, N. Y.: Continuing improvement by repairs, $2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Strike out "no part of which shall be expended on the channel in front of the city" and insert "which, together with the amount on hand, is to be used in removing obstructions from the mouth of the Oswegatchee and continuing the excavation at the lower harbor upstream;" so it will read: "Improving harbor at Ogdensburg, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $10,000; which, together with the amount on hand, is to be used in removing obstructions from the mouth of the Oswegatchee and continuing the excavation at the lower harbor upstream."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor of New York at Gedney's Channel, New York: Continuing improvement, $150,000; of which sum $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Chief of Engineers and the Coast and Geodetic Survey to ascertain the best outlet to the ocean: Provided, That in the judgment of the War Department such survey is necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I move to strike out, in line 113, the words "and fifty," so it will read "one hundred thousand," instead of "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. Chairman, I was not present the other day when the general discussion was had on this bill, and regret that I was necessarily absent, as I had intended to submit some remarks upon the bill when taken up for general debate. But not being present at that time, I avail myself of the opportunity now to make a few remarks. Of course under the five-minute rule I can say but little, but I have made this motion to amend for the purpose of noticing some criticisms which have been made upon the river and harbor bill by that excellent newspaper the New York Tribune.

In the Tribune of Friday, April 16, I find the following article:

The river and harbor bill is now before the House, and a majority of the Representatives seem to be making ready to vote with an eye single to the wishes of their constituents. Over fifteen millions are called for by the measure, an immense part of which is made up of appropriations for projects which can not claim national or even real local importance. The money is to be put apparently where it will do the most good politically. Here, for instance, is one million for that great maritime State, with its great bays and tide-water harbors, Kentucky, and another for Missouri; but for this entire State of New York, into which is poured so much of the commerce of the nation, only $875,000 is allowed.

Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that so good a newspaper as the New York Tribune, and usually so fair, should make complaint of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for having appropriated only the sum of $875,000 for the State of New York, in which it says is poured so much of the commerce of the nation.

Let me ask the New York Tribune or the members of this House from the State of New York, where does that commerce come from and where does it go? Does it not come from the West and the Northwest? Does it not come from foreign countries and go out largely through the lakes and rivers of the North? Is not the State of New York, and especially the city of New York, deeply interested in the improvement of all the channels of transportation in the country through which is carried the immense commerce that comes to and goes from that great city and State? Is not the State of New York interested in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal; in Hay Lake Channel; in the Detroit River, which is sometimes absolutely choked up with the immense commerce which passes through it, and much of which finds its way to New York, that great commercial city of the country?

Why, it seems to me very short-sighted for a New York paper to complain that the State has only $875,000, when there is no other city in this country and no other State so much interested in all improvements which benefit the commerce of the country as the city and State of New York.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not made this motion for the purpose of decreasing this appropriation, and will not insist upon its adoption; but I have made it to give me an opportunity of saying what I have now said. And when they complain of the State of Michigan, and say that Michigan has nearly a million of dollars appropriated by this bill, is it not known to every one who has given the least attention to the subject that there is not a harbor on Lake Michigan, whether it be a harbor of refuge or for commercial purposes, in which the city of New York and the State of New York is not deeply interested—quite as much so as the people of Michigan? So are the people of Illinois interested in these improvements quite as much as the people of Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, all the appropriations in this bill for Michigan are as much in the interest of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and other States west as they are for Michigan; and so are they of interest to New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio.

Mr. DINGLEY was recognized, and, by consent, yielded his time to Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Maine for the courtesy extended to me in permitting me to continue my remarks.

There is not a city or State east or west, especially in the North, but has a common interest in the improvement of the harbors on the great lakes of the North. If there is anything in which the people of this country would seem to have a common interest, it is the improvement of our harbors and means of transportation, by which the great commercial interests of the country are promoted and benefited. It is by the commerce of the country that the great city of New York has been built up and enriched; and her people and her great newspapers should be among the last to complain of improvements which are to benefit and encourage that commerce.

But it has been stated that Illinois gets some $600,000 and more in this bill. I do not know how this amount is ascertained, or what appropriations are included to make up this amount. But I do know that you must include a portion of the appropriation for the Mississippi River, in which the people of the entire Mississippi Valley are as much interested as the people of the State of Illinois, to make up that amount.

If there are $640,000 in this bill chargeable to Illinois, the amount must be made up in part by taking a part of the appropriation for the improvement of the Ohio River, in which Pennsylvania is as much or more interested than the State of Illinois, or perhaps any other State of the Union; and a part of the Mississippi River, in which, as I said before, the entire Mississippi Valley is interested. And so, sir, I might go on and allude to other improvements in this bill in other States in which the city and State of New York are as deeply interested as the States in which such improvements are located.

Mr. Chairman, I will say here that I do not believe there is a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors who could have told within $100,000 of what any State had appropriated for it in the river and harbor bill when we finished its consideration and reported it to this House; and I believe if there has ever been a river and harbor bill carefully considered by any committee of the House this has been by the present Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If there has ever been a river and harbor bill when members of the House from all parts of the country have had fuller and fairer consideration in its preparation and formation—and this is the fifth bill which I have helped to formulate—I am not aware of it. I regard this as a fair bill, well and carefully considered.

We have given to Senators and Representatives and to commercial bodies from all sections of the country a patient and faithful hearing, and the committee has done the best it could do without reference to geographical limitations or geographical boundaries to make a bill which would benefit the whole country. We have known no North, no South, nor have we recognized any East or West in the consideration of the bill. All have been treated as far as we could with equal fairness and justice, and every case has been considered upon its individual merits. We have only studied the commercial advantages to be promoted by the improvement of the particular river and harbor under consideration, and I speak for myself when I say that my work has been done as well as I knew how to do it; and while these appropriations are for improvements located in one State and another, I have regarded the States and the people of the States as parts of one great country and people, and I believe that spirit actuated every member of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it be true that the fifteen members of the River and Harbor Committee have got $10,000,000 for their respective States or not in this bill. I have not figured it out. But I do say that the State of New York is interested in the harbor at Chicago and in the harbor at Calumet, in the Detroit River, in the Hay Lake Channel, in the Sault Ste. Marie's Canal, in Portage Lake Canal, in the harbor at Duluth, and in all of the other harbors in the Northwest for which appropriations are made in this bill as much so as the people of the Northwestern States are themselves. And now, having said this much, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT. I can not renew it, and the gentleman from Illinois, by withdrawing it, has cut me off from my speech. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Erie, Pa.: Continuing improvement, and also for the improvement of said harbor as recommended by the Chief of Engineers January 13, 1885, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and accept for the United States from the marine hospital of Erie, Pa., the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., as tendered by the said marine hospital, agreeably to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871: And provided further, That $30,000 of said sum shall not be expended until the aforesaid title shall be accepted by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a point of order upon these two provisos to that section. This is a river and harbor bill, and properly has in it nothing that does not belong to the improvement of rivers and harbors. There is nothing in this bill that discloses that the acceptance of this gift in any way will benefit a harbor or river. We have heard something of a cognate subject here in past years. Bill No. 1440 was reported on in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress by report No. 126. It was to give to the United States 102 acres of land, known as Garrison Hill, on this peninsula. The enacting clause was stricken out by a vote of 82 to 36. Mr. BAYNE demanded the yeas and nays, but only 18 supported his demand.

Now, it was said the other day by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that this was a covert way to give to the United States something that we had declined by that majority to accept before. But as that is upon the merits of the question I do not care to go into it.

Let us see just what this is. It is to allow the United States to accept certain property, and upon acceptance to pay $30,000 or to use $30,000 of this appropriation on certain terms:

As tendered by the said marine hospital, agreeably to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871.

Let us see just what that is. We are to accept it from the Erie Hospital Company, that was created by the act of 27th March, 1867, which was to establish at or near the city of Erie a hospital. It exempted all the buildings, &c., from taxation, and then in section 13 it is declared that the hospital shall be on that part of garrison grounds south of Philadelphia and Erie Railroad, now occupied by small-pox hospital and given for hospital and park. Any other society may have 5 acres for hospital, and none shall be established elsewhere in the city of Erie.

Section 14 gave it certain water rights, extending out 1,000 feet from the mainland, and vested them in the hospital corporation thereby created, for the use, benefit, and advantage of said corporation.

Section 19 declared that if the property of the corporation were used for any other purpose not therein authorized it should all revert to the State of Pennsylvania.

That was the act of 1867. It was amended on the 4th of March, 1869, to this effect, that whereas the councils of Erie had not been able to make that peninsula pay its expenses, therefore they should turn it all over to the directors of the hospital association, to be controlled according to the purposes of the act of 1867, which I have just read, that is, for hospital purposes and for parks, and with the privilege of any other hospital company or society building a hospital and having 5 acres upon it.

Then comes the act of 1871, under the terms of which this gift is proposed to be accepted. First, the act appropriates $30,000 to the Erie hospital to pay its debts and furnish its building so as it will be in proper condition to take in patients. And then it declares:

But only on condition—

That $30,000 is to be given—only on condition that the said marine hospital corporation shall reconvey to the said State of Pennsylvania by good and sufficient deeds, to be approved by the attorney-general, of lands in any way granted to said marine hospital by its grant of incorporation approved March 22, 1867, and the buildings now thereon, with the appurtenances, to be held by the city for the use and purpose defined by said act incorporating said hospital at Erie, and on the further condition that the said marine hospital shall convey to the United States of America all title it shall have to the peninsula of Presque Isle, obtained from the State of Pennsylvania by act of March 4, 1869, entitled "A supplement to an act incorporating a marine hospital at Erie," to be held by the United States, as near as may be, in its present condition and only for the purpose of national defense, and for protection to the harbor of Erie; but in all other respects to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction, of the State of Pennsylvania; and the consent of the State of Pennsylvania is hereby given to such transfer of title only for the purposes and under the limitations hereinbefore mentioned.

The other two sections in the act are foreign to the matter now under inquiry.

Now, you will observe when the United States is asked to accept the title to this property by this proviso—that it is giving our consent in a river and harbor bill that we shall accept that peninsula on condition that we keep up all the buildings that are on it and the parks that are on it, for that is the only way to keep it in its present condition "as near as may be;" and on the further condition that we shall use it only for the purposes of public defense and for the defense of Erie, Pa. Those are the words of the statute. If we accept it on those conditions we morally, and I would say legally but for the fact that the United States can not be compelled by law to do anything—we accept it upon the moral promise that we will build defenses on that peninsula for the public defense and for the defense of the harbor of Erie. It can mean nothing else, therefore, but the committing of the United States in the river and harbor bill to the building up of a fort or some other public defense at that place. The building of forts belongs to the Military Committee and not to the River and Harbor Committee, and the point of order I make is that the committee had no jurisdiction over the matter.

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and accept for the United States from the marine hospital of Erie, Pa., the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., as tendered by the said marine hospital agreeably to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871—

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], like the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] the other day, wholly misconceives this proposition and does not understand it at all. I was a little surprised at the attack made upon the bill before the proposition came up for consideration during the general debate on this bill while I was absent by the gentleman from New York, who thought he saw an old scheme in this and opposed it because he suspected there was something wrong in the proposition. If the gentleman had made an examination of the facts he would have ascertained there was no old scheme in this at all and no scheme that had ever been considered by Congress in connection with the establishment of soldiers' homes; and his suspicion arose from some other cause than from what is set forth in this proposition. No point of order such as is suggested by the gentleman from Georgia lies against it. If I understand the position he takes, he makes the point of order because it contains original legislation.

Mr. HAMMOND. Oh, no; I took no such position as that.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I do not understand your point of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. That may be. The point was this: that inasmuch as the act which tenders this property says that it shall be accepted by the United States only on condition that it shall be kept in its present condition as near as may be, and used for public defense and the defense of Erie, therefore it is not a matter for the improvement of a harbor, but at best is nothing but a matter of public defense, which belongs not to this committee but to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, even though the contention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] were just as he sets it forth, I should still deny that this proposition is not germane to the bill and properly within its limits. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is not a limited jurisdiction in the sense suggested by the gentleman. That committee can originate legislation—such legislation as may be necessary to promote the commerce of the country, or to promote the interests of navigation and thereby promote the commerce of the country. This proposition has been wholly misunderstood, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was entirely mistaken when he said that it was the same proposition which was pending before the last Congress, to cede to the United States property worth $250,000. That was a munificent gift on the part of Pennsylvania to the National Government, for the purpose of establishing a soldiers' home, and it was refused by Congress because, I presume, of its munificence; for many a bill goes through this House by a large majority that will extract from the Treasury $250,000, but when a proposition comes here to donate to the National Government property worth $250,000, without one cent of consideration, it seems to excite a suspicion that there is something wrong in it. That sort of suspicion originates in minds that are not familiar with munificent donations, whether on the part of governments or individuals.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BAYNE. In a moment. The proposition in this bill, Mr. Chairman, is intended for no other purpose in the world than to improve navigation, or rather to preserve the harbor at Erie. It is not intended to give lands to the United States at all. Its object is merely to cede to the United States the control of what is called Presque Isle, a peninsula which runs out into the lake, and the preservation of which is equivalent to the construction of a jetty for the purpose of holding the waters of the harbor at Erie within their bounds, and thereby making it a harbor—for it is that very peninsula Presque Isle which makes the harbor at Erie. The land which was proposed to be donated to the National Government has already been taken by the State of Pennsylvania, and upon it has been established a soldiers' home at the expense of the State of Pennsylvania, and it is going to be kept up by that State; for, unlike New York, Pennsylvania is not going to call upon the Grand Army of the Republic to make voluntary contributions to sustain its home, but will support it by taxation.

Mr. HEPBRUN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Not just at this moment. Let me state the case first, and then you can ask questions. Mr. Chairman, there was an act passed by Congress in 1872 which I hold in my hand, and which reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to receive and accept from the marine hospital, Pennsylvania, a corporation duly incorporated by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the title to a piece or parcel of land, being the peninsula lying to the northward of and inclosing the bay of Presque Isle, containing 2,024 acres, more or less, to be held by the Government of the United States for the protection of the harbor at Erie: Provided, That the deed conveying the same shall not be received or accepted until the title to the same is complete and indefeasible, nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers appointed by the President.

The transaction contemplated by that proposition was that Presque Isle should go the United States Government in order that the Government might have it for the purpose of protecting the harbor at Erie. The Secretary of War, upon an examination of the tender made by the State of Pennsylvania, ascertained, or rather concluded, that the title was not indefeasible, and he refused to accept the deed that was tendered by the marine hospital; but upon further consideration by the War Department, the President of the United States recommended to the Forty-seventh Congress that the title tendered by the marine hospital be accepted. That recommendation was based upon the report of the local engineer, who reported that the preservation of the peninsula of Presque Isle was necessary to the preservation of the harbor at Erie. He made that report to the Chief of Engineers, and the Secretary of War made the report to the President, and the President, by a special message, recommended the acceptance of the title tendered of the marine hospital to the United States. That message is embodied in Executive Document No. 4 of the Forty-seventh Congress, which I hold in my hand. The language of the President is:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 4th instant, setting forth certain facts respecting the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., and recommending that the subject be presented to Congress, with the view to legislation by that body modifying the act of May 27, 1882, "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to accept the peninsula in Lake Erie, opposite the harbor of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania (17 Statutes, page 162), so as to authorize the Secretary of War to accept the title to said peninsula proffered by the marine hospital of Pennsylvania, pursuant to an act of the Legislature of that State, approved by the governor May 11, 1871."

The act which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] read.

And the Secretary of War recites the proposition of the act of 1871 making a tender of Presque Isle to the Government of the United States and recommends the acceptance of that proposition. A board of engineers from the Engineer Corps, convened in 1873, reported:

That whereas the Presque Isle peninsula at Erie, Pa., is in constant need of protection by the Government to prevent its being breached by the action of the waves in storms; and

Whereas it is also valuable in part for light-house purposes, and is now so occupied by the United States; and

Whereas it appears that at present it is not only the resort of disorderly persons, but subject to depredations by cutting of timber and otherwise, thereby endangering its maintenance as a protection to the harbor of Erie:

We respectfully recommend that the United States accept the title to this peninsula from the marine hospital of the State of Pennsylvania, that it be placed in the custody of the Engineer Department, United States Army, so far as relates to the preservation of the land from change by cutting trees, carrying away sand, or otherwise interfering with the natural features of the peninsula, and that no such change should be permitted to be made without authority from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, &c.

Then the Secretary of War recites the facts which I have stated, and recommends, as I have said, the acceptance of the proposition from the marine hospital of Pennsylvania. That is all there is in this proposition. It is to cede Presque Isle to the Government of the United States for the purpose of preserving and keeping it in condition as a part of the harbor of Erie, and for no other purpose. Pennsylvania does not care for it in the least, except so far as it promotes the preservation of that harbor. Pennsylvania has no interest in it, nor has a single citizen of Pennsylvania any interest in it, except so far as to secure a good, safe harbor to Erie. There is not a line or a word in this acceptance or in the act of 1871, or in anything connected with this whole affair, which points to anything except that this property shall be taken by the Government to protect that harbor and place Presque Isle under the jurisdiction of the United States. It may be that this proposition is looked upon with disfavor by certain gentlemen because it involves no outlay by the Government. If this were a proposition that the Government should pay a hundred thousand dollars for this property, it would not perhaps excite so much suspicion. But there is no such purpose. We do not want any pay for it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any park or anything of that kind upon this island which the Government will be bound to maintain under the terms of this cession.

Mr. BAYNE. Nothing of the kind. My colleague [Mr. SCOTT] can tell all about the matter, for he knows every foot of the territory in question.

Mr. SCOTT. As gentlemen, I presume, are aware, the harbor of Presque Isle, in the city of Erie, is the only connection or inlet or outlet that Pennsylvania has with the great chain of lakes. My friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has evidently been misinformed or does not correctly understand what the clause in the bill proposes to accomplish. That the House may fully understand the subject I would state that the harbor of Erie is formed by a low peninsula, containing about 2,500 acres of land, extending from the main shore eastwardly for about 2 miles. This peninsula constitutes the harbor of Erie, the protection against the lake. It is a low, sandy beach, varying in width from one-half to three-quarters of a mile; it is grown up with timber, which has heretofore formed the principal barrier against the storms and prevented them from destroying the peninsula, and consequently our harbor.

Of the large amount of money which the Federal Government has disbursed for the protection of the harbor of Erie, more than half of it has been expended upon this peninsula; and any further appropriations for the protection of that harbor must be expended there. There is not a single building upon this peninsula of any value except Government light-houses and the necessary buildings for light-house keepers. There are no parks there, nor was it ever intended or expected that there should be, as the main protection for the harbor is the undergrowth of trees and timber upon this peninsula.

Some years ago a scheme of a kind not unknown in legislative bodies was gotten up in our State by which this peninsula and certain property on the mainland were to be donated by the State of Pennsylvania to what was known as the marine hospital. The people of my city were not aware of what was really going on until we woke up one morning and discovered that our harbor was in danger of being ruined by the peninsula passing into private hands and being sold and parceled out to a lot of speculators. This gift to the marine hospital included not only the peninsula, but a considerable portion of the mainland. The marine hospital which was erected by this association or company was on the mainland, and the parks which it was proposed to establish were to be on the mainland.

Some of our citizens, myself among the number, appealed to the Legislature and got an act donating this peninsula to the General Government. We believed it was essentially necessary that the General Government should own it, because the Government was expending money to protect the harbor; and if it owned it, could do with it as it might be thought necessary and proper. Another object in the donation was the public defense, if the General Government should ever require it for that purpose.

The title to the peninsula at the time I refer to was vested in the marine hospital. The State of Pennsylvania had made large appropriations toward the construction of this hospital, and it was still uncompleted, and the necessary funds to complete it could only be obtained through State aid. The Legislature of our State, realizing the error which had been committed in vesting the title to the peninsula in the marine hospital, and appreciating its importance not only so far as the interests of the city of Erie were concerned but of the whole State of Pennsylvania, passed an act appropriating conditionally the sum of $30,000 for the completion of the marine hospital, provided the trustees of the hospital executed a deed for the peninsula to the United States Government, and at the same time the Legislature passed the necessary act vesting the title to the peninsula in the United States Government if the same was accepted by the United States.

Congress, during the administration of President Grant, passed a law authorizing the Secretary of War to accept title to the peninsula provided the board of officers, composed of members of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, recommended the same. This board met, and, after a careful examination and investigation into the whole subject, recommended that the Government should accept the title to the peninsula, and in accordance with this recommendation the marine hospital executed a deed for the peninsula to the United States. This deed was placed on record in favor of the United States in our county, and was tendered to the Government, or the Secretary of War, who referred it to the Attorney-General for his approval. The Attorney-General, in rendering his opinion, raised some technical objections to the deed, and the Secretary of War decided that he could not accept the title until the objections raised by the Attorney-General were remedied. In the mean time the marine hospital, as an association, had gone out of existence, and there was no power left in that body to rectify this difficulty.

Mr. Brewster, who was then the Attorney-General, told me that it was simply a technical matter. My colleague [Mr. BAYNE] has referred to the special message of President Arthur calling the attention of Congress to this subject, and recommending that Congress should accept the title as made by the marine hospital. As the matter now stands the State of Pennsylvania is absolutely divested of any power or authority over the peninsula, and the Federal Government, while it has not absolutely accepted the title, has assumed more or less control over it, and in fact the peninsula, like Mahomet's coffin, has been hanging between heaven and earth, without an owner who can assert any positive authority over it and protect it from the depredations of those who may feel inclined to destroy it. The State of Pennsylvania, and my city especially, has a large interest in the protection and preservation of this peninsula, for upon its existence depends the only port Pennsylvania has upon the great chain of lakes, and I trust this House will not now strike out the clause which will perfect the title in the United States to the peninsula, but will accept the deed as tendered, which will enable the Government in its own way, without the interference of any other parties, to do whatever may be necessary for the protection of our harbor.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, this is a question of order, and I am sorry to say both the gentlemen from Pennsylvania have chosen to argue it as if it were a question on its merits.

The question is simply this: Whether a river and harbor bill is the proper place in which to rectify what my friend from Pennsylvania calls the lack of a technical delivery in the way of taking a deed. From the report, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania read in part, I ascertain that the Attorney-General of the United States declined to take the deed to this property on the ground it was a defeasible deed, and upon that ground the title was declined. In other words, it was a deed upon condition, and the condition required the United States to engage in the work of military defense.

If a proposition is made to this House to convey this property without any condition whatever, simply on its merits and in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, as not read by my friend from Pennsylvania but contained in the report, I will cheerfully vote for it, because I am satisfied, from the explanation the gentleman has made, this matter has no relation to the matter of the marine hospital which was up two years ago.

But still it is none the less obnoxious to the point of order, in that in a river and harbor bill we are required to pass upon a question of title, which is a law question, and must come up in the proper way in the form of a bill to pass this title to the United States.

Allow me to read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, dated the 4th instant, setting forth certain facts respecting the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., and recommending that the subject be presented to Congress with the view to legislation by that body modifying the act of May 27, 1882, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to accept the peninsula in Lake Erie, opposite the harbor of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania" (17 Statutes, page 162), so as to authorize the Secretary of War to accept the title to said peninsula proffered by the marine hospital of Pennsylvania, pursuant to an act of the Legislature of that State approved by the governor May 11, 1871.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 6, 1882.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, December 4, 1882.

SIR: By an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, approved by the governor on May 11, 1871, an appropriation of the sum of $30,000 was made for the benefit of the marine hospital of Pennsylvania at Erie, Pa., one of the conditions of the appropriation being thus expressed:

"And on the further condition that said marine hospital corporation shall convey to the United States of America all title it may have to the peninsula of Presque Isle, obtained from the State of Pennsylvania by act of February 4, A. D. 1869, entitled 'A supplement to an act incorporating the marine hospital at Erie,' to be held by said United States, as near as may be, in its present condition, and only for the purposes of national defense and for the protection of the harbor of Erie, but in all other respects to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania, and the consent of the State of Pennsylvania is hereby given to such transfer of title only for the purposes and under the limitations hereinbefore mentioned."

By an act approved May 27, 1872, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to accept said land with the following provisions:

"Provided, That the deed conveying the same shall not be received or accepted until the title to the same is complete and indefeasible, nor unless the acceptance thereof shall be recommended by a board of officers of the Corps of Engineers appointed by the President." (17 Statutes, page 162.)

A board of officers of the Corps of Engineers convened in accordance with the foregoing provisions reported July 9, 1873:

"That whereas the Presque Isle peninsula at Erie, Pa., is in constant need of protection by the Government to prevent its being breached by the action of the waves in storms; and

"Whereas it is also valuable in part for light-house purposes, and it is not now so occupied by the United States; and

"Whereas it appears that at present it is not only the resort of disorderly persons, but subject to depredations by cutting of timber and otherwise, thereby endangering its maintenance as a protection to the harbor of Erie:

"We respectfully recommend that the United States accept the title to this peninsula from the marine hospital of the State of Pennsylvania; that it be placed in the custody of the Engineer Department, United States Army, so far as it relates to the preservation of the land from change by cutting trees, carrying away sand, or otherwise interfering with the natural features of the peninsula; and that no such change should be permitted to be made without authority from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army," &c.

The deed to the land in question proffered by the marine hospital pursuant to the above-mentioned act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania of May 11, 1871, not having been accepted, the subject was, under date of May 2, 1882, submitted by this Department to the honorable the Attorney-General, with request that, if said deed be found to be properly drawn and conveyed to the United States a complete and indefeasible title, the proper United States district attorney be instructed to assist the United States engineer officer in charge of the public works at Erie in procuring an abstract of the title held by the marine hospital of Pennsylvania at the date of the deed, and such other papers as were necessary in the premises.

The matter was accordingly referred to the United States district attorney for the western district of Pennsylvania, who, under date of October 31, last, submitted a report, in which he expressed the view—concurred in by the honorable the Attorney-General—that under the provisions of the above cited act of Congress of May 27, 1872, the Secretary of War can not accept the deed proffered by the marine hospital corporation.

In consideration of these facts and of the importance of the peninsula of Presque Isle in connection with the improvement and maintenance of the harbor of Erie, Pa., I have the honor to recommend that the subject be presented to Congress, with the view to legislation modifying the aforementioned act of May 27, 1872, so as to authorize the Secretary of War to accept the title to the land as offered by the marine hospital, if such legislation shall seem proper to Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT.

Now, there is no doubt legislation is proper; but I respectfully submit to the chairman it is not proper in a river and harbor bill, although it is proper as an independent measure, to which I shall give my hearty assent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. This is not an appropriation; it is a provision of law—new legislation—and is, therefore, obnoxious to the rule, clause 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. HAMMOND. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. LONG. Does the gentleman claim that the rule is applicable to this as a general appropriation bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Do gentlemen say that it is not a general appropriation bill?

Mr. RANDALL. It has not been so ruled.

Mr. HAMMOND. It never has been so held by anybody. The Speaker has held that it is not.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not, of course, a general appropriation bill in the sense of being a bill heretofore recognized for the support of the Government; but so far as the legislation is concerned it is a general appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will find that there is no rule allowing amendments of this character upon a river and harbor appropriation bill which would not be in order upon other appropriation bills.

Mr. SCOTT. This is not an amendment. It is a report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that; it is a part of the river and harbor bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this proposition may be reported upon this bill, there is no legislative proposition whatever which you could not put upon it in the same way. What is this proposition, and I ask the attention of the committee for a moment:

That the Secretary of War—

There is a naked, legal, substantive proposition embraced in the bill—

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and accept for the United States, from the marine hospital of Erie, Pa., the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., as tendered by the said marine hospital, agreeably to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871.

We are required to accept this donation agreeably to an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, and by adopting this provision we adopt that act of the Pennsylvania Legislature and complete the contract between the United States and the State of Pennsylvania, as contemplated in that act and in this appropriation bill; and therefore this is the naked proposition which we are called upon to enact: to embody the terms of a proposition embraced in an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania which has not even been read in our presence and the conditions of which we do not know.

Mr. HAMMOND. Oh, yes, we do.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him to state how or under what authority this Committee on Rivers and Harbors acquired jurisdiction at this session of that proposition?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is just what I want to find out. I have intended to imply that they have no jurisdiction upon the subject. It has no relation itself to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; it is a question of purchasing land in the vicinity of a harbor—purchasing or accepting a donation of land with conditions which amount to a purchase, because I am informed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] that if we accept the donation we accept it with conditions requiring certain appropriations to be hereafter made on the harbor in that vicinity.

So that this is not only a substantive proposition of general legislation entirely independent of and having no relation whatever to the subject of rivers and harbors, but it ratifies and makes us adopt an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature which has not been read in the presence of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman is mistaken in that; I read it here myself.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was not present at the time.

Mr. BAYNE. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois a question, or rather permit me to correct my friend from Illinois, as I am sure he wants to be fair.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. This whole matter is referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by the Engineer Department, and by the recommendation of that department in their reports they recommend that this improvement be made at Presque Isle to preserve the harbor at Erie.

Mr. HEWITT. Does it appear in the printed recommendation?

Mr. BAYNE. It does in that of 1884; and I think——

Mr. HEWITT. But does it appear in the present recommendation?

Mr. BAYNE. I am not aware that it does, although it is likely.

Mr. HEWITT. There is no such recommendation in this year's report.

Mr. BAYNE. I am not certain of that. I know it is in the report for 1884, and I am inclined to think it is embodied in the present report.

Mr. REAGAN. In the report to which the gentleman refers it simply submits the matter for consideration and recommends that it be accepted in accordance with the act of the Pennsylvania Legislature.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was mistaken, Mr. Chairman, in saying that the act of the Pennsylvania Legislature had not been read in the presence of the committee. I am informed by the gentleman from Georgia that it was read, but I was not in the committee at the time and did not hear it. That, however, does not change the force of the statement I make, that this is a substantive proposition so far as this discussion is concerned; for by it we ratify the act of the Pennsylvania Legislature, and it is all legislation outside of an appropriation bill and outside of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I do not care whether the Engineers' Department have spoken of this subject or discussed it, or whether they recommend it, or whether that discussion and recommendation have, under the general order referring these reports to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, gotten it before that committee. All that has nothing whatever to do with the subject now before us. It may be that in that manner it came before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but that is not material. The committee had no jurisdiction to report a general law upon the subject. If a bill had been introduced in the House and referred to the committee especially with reference to this subject that would probably have changed the status, but even then it would not have been reported as a part of an appropriation bill.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to read one part of the recommendation of the engineers with reference to this improvement?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BAYNE. Reference is made to this harbor at Erie, as will be seen in this report.

The engineers say:

The only work done during the fiscal year was minor repairs to the north pier and the south breakwater, amounting in all to $206.78.

In September and October, 1884, a survey was made of the peninsula.

That is the point in question here.

PROTECTION OF THE WESTERN NECK OF THE PENINSULA.

Most of the protection fences and pile jetties are in a dilapidated condition, but the narrowest parts of the peninsula are from 400 to 500 feet wide, with a crest rising about 5 feet above ordinary water.

The board of engineers of June 14, 1882, recommended that $10,000 be set apart from the amount available for Erie harbor to provide for the prompt construction of a dike at the neck in case of necessity.

The fact is, although the jurisdiction of the United States has not been ceded by the State of Pennsylvania, the Engineer Department has been exerting over that peninsula the very control which we propose in this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought I was yielding for a question merely.

Mr. BAYNE. I was stating the fact that the Engineer Department has been exercising that control, and this is recommended by the report of the engineer on which we are acting.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the sole question now pending is as to the point of order.

Mr. FELTON. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] proceeds I wish to ask him this question: Is it not in the province of this committee to recommend such improvements as it may think necessary for the preservation of the harbor?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand that the jurisdiction of the United States to improve a harbor authorizes the Government to buy the lands that surround the harbor. I do not see that the ownership of land that surrounds a harbor has anything to do with improving it for the purpose of commerce.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the rules do not permit the largest latitude in connection with the river and harbor bills, and whether it is not the fact that intentionally or otherwise there is not any restraint on that committee in this connection except a sense of public propriety?

Mr. SPRINGER. But no appropriation should be in order except in continuation of works already begun. And there has been no work begun of purchasing ground in connection with harbors.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to say in response to the suggestion of the gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], that neither the River and Harbor Committee nor any other has original jurisdiction or any jurisdiction except for matters referred to it by the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. The River and Harbor Committee has jurisdiction over legislation for the improvement of rivers and harbors. The Military Committee has jurisdiction over matters affecting the public defense. The Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction over the matter of arranging where there shall be light-houses. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over the appropriation of money for light-houses and for the purchasing of land for public defense and appropriating money for public defense.

I did not make the point of order that this was general legislation, because that point is not well taken in my opinion. In a very elaborate opinion by Speaker CARLISLE in the Forty-seventh Congress he held that this was not a general appropriation bill, and that the restrictions in Rule XXIII that applied to the general appropriation bills could not be made applicable to this. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. WELLBORN] so held on this bill four years ago. When I had the honor of occupying the chair on this bill two years ago the same thing was held over and over. You may put new legislation on this bill so far as that rule is concerned. But where all points of order were reserved, as they were on this bill, you can not put in this bill anything that does not belong to the subject-matter of the improvement of rivers and harbors, because that committee has the right of way for its appropriations only upon those objects, and as to all other matters they must come in like any other committee, by having bills referred to them and report on them as separate bills.

Now, on the point of order I did not know when I began that the Attorney-General of the United States had ever held that this was a deed conditioned that the United States should build forts, and that for that reason it was a defeasible title. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] for bringing that to my aid. It only supports the view I gave that we can not accept this gift without binding ourselves to build a fort or other work of public defense.

I do not care whether it is to get us into the acceptance of a hospital or anything of that kind. But is it to improve the harbor or is it to accept the land to erect fortifications? If it is the latter, then this committee has no jurisdiction unless this House chooses to vote them jurisdiction by referring to them a bill for that purpose. But the Committee on Military Affairs would have that jurisdiction.

I repeat, and with that I will conclude what I have to say, the provision I ask to have ruled out is this:

Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and accept for the United States, from the marine hospital of Erie, Pa., the title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa., as tendered by the said marine hospital, agreeably to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania approved May 11, 1871.

Now, the provisions of that act are these in short:

To be held by said United States, as near as may be in its present condition, and only for the purposes of national defense and for the protection of the harbor of Erie, but in all other respects to be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State of Pennsylvania; and the consent of the State of Pennsylvania is hereby given to such transfer of title only for the purpose and under the limitations hereinbefore mentioned.

If, therefore, we accept this gift, we accept it of course on condition that we will make no use of the land but for public defense and for the defense of the harbor of Erie. In other words, then, we accept it for that purpose.

Mr. REAGAN. And we exclude the idea, of improving the harbor.

Mr. HAMMOND. We exclude every other idea, because the statute says "you are authorized to tender for that and for nothing else;" and when we accept it, we will have simply done over again what the learned Attorney-General told us we had done before—we will have agreed to accept a defeasible title on terms on which we do not desire to accept it.

Mr. LONG. Is not that an argument against the merits of the provision?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly, it is an argument against the merits, but the other is an objection to the proposition being here at all on this bill.

Mr. LONG. Suppose we had referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a proposition for the construction of a fort, do you hold that in that case the Committee on Rivers and Harbors would not be entitled to report on the subject?

Mr. HAMMOND. Oh, no; because I have said that if a bill for this purpose had been introduced and referred to that committee it would have gotten jurisdiction by the reference. But even then it could not report such a proposition on the river and harbor bill, which, because it is for the improvement of rivers and harbors, has the right of way. The committee could have reported the subject in another bill, but not on this. Suppose the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], who has the honor of being chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, instead of referring his education bill to the Committee on Labor, had had it referred by a vote to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, could they have brought in that bill as part and parcel of this? Not at all; but because jurisdiction would have been given to the committee by the vote of the House referring the subject to them they could have reported a separate bill for education.

Mr. LONG. Has not the subject-matter of Presque Isle been referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the letter of the Secretary of War and the report of the engineer?

Mr. HEWITT. I would like to answer that.

Mr. HAMMOND. No; there is not a word on the subject in the letter of the Secretary of War to which the gentleman refers, for I have examined that letter.

Mr. LONG. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to read from it.

Mr. HAMMOND. There is not a word in it on that subject.

Mr. LONG. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to read the letter in the report of 1885, which was referred in 1886.

Mr. HAMMOND. There is not a word in that letter on the subject, so far as I know, and I have sought to get information.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the bill to which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] refers, by which the State of Pennsylvania undertakes to convey this property to the General Government, there is an express provision that it is deeded to the General Government for two objects—one the protection of the harbor of Erie, the other military purposes. In discussing this point of order, gentlemen have referred to obligations resting upon the Government in regard to fortifications at that place. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] referred to fortifications in connection with the Attorney-General's opinion. Now, I say here that the word "fortifications" is not mentioned in the Attorney General's opinion.

Mr. HEWITT. I have read the Attorney-General's opinion.

Mr. SCOTT. I have got the opinion.

Mr. HEWITT. I have read it, and the word "fortifications" is not in it, and I did not say it was.

Mr. SCOTT. And yet the gentleman says that the Attorney-General refers to fortifications.

Mr. HEWITT. He refers to the conditions of the grant.

Mr. SCOTT. He refers to the conditions of the grant, but he does not use the word "fortifications," as if there was an obligation resting upon this Government, if it accepted this grant, to deplete the Treasury in erecting military fortifications for the protection of the city of Erie.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that my distinguished colleague [Mr. HEWITT] will get into no controversy with the State of Pennsylvania on this matter, as I understand that they have come to a complete agreement by striking coal off the free-list and putting wool on. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to decide this question. Two points of order are raised against this proviso, one by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on the ground that it is new legislation, and therefore, under clause 3 of Rule XXI, is not in order on this bill. It has been uniformly held ever since the present occupant of the chair has been a member of this House that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill, and that therefore new legislation is in order on a river and harbor bill. The Chair, therefore, has no difficulty in disposing of that point, and holds it to be not well taken.

The other ground urged against this proviso is that it is not within the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee——

Mr. HAMMOND. On this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That it is not within the jurisdiction of the River and Harbor Committee on this bill, and is therefore out of order. If that statement of fact were correct, the Chair would have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the point of order is well taken. But the Chair is of opinion, from what has been submitted to him touching that peninsula of Presque Isle in the harbor of Erie, that the title to it is needful to the Government for purposes of navigation and for the improvement of the harbor for the uses of navigation. Now, it may be true that the conditions on which the Government is to accept the title to this property are very onerous, and that it would be unwise to accept the title upon such onerous conditions. On that point the Chair expresses no opinion. That is a question which addresses itself to the discretion of the committee. The only question for the Chair to determine is, Is the title to this piece of land needful to the Government in order to improve the harbor of Erie for purposes of navigation? The Chair is satisfied that it is. As he has already stated, if the conditions are so onerous as to make the acceptance of the title by the Government unwise, that is a matter which addresses itself to the discretion of the committee and not to the judgment of the Chair. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to amend by striking out the proviso.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the language of the last proviso, that "$20,000 of said sum shall not be expended until the aforesaid title be accepted by the Secretary of War." Gentlemen have assured the committee that the adoption of this provision would in no wise increase the necessary expenditures, yet evidently they must be mistaken. This bill undoubtedly appropriates for this purpose no more money than is necessary. Here are $50,000 appropriated, but $30,000 of this is to be expended upon the contingency of securing this title. If the title be not secured, $20,000 will be sufficient for this harbor; but if we do secure this title, then the other $30,000 are to be expended, making a total of $50,000. If this is true, how can gentlemen state that no additional expense is to result from the securement of the title to this little neck of land? We save $30,000 by not getting the title; we expend $30,000 as soon as we do secure the title.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HAMMOND to strike out the proviso, it was rejected.

Mr. HEWITT. I move to amend by striking out the word "fee," in line 131, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "an indefeasible;" so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to receive and accept for the United States from the marine hospital of Erie, Pa., an indefeasible title to the peninsula of Presque Isle, at Erie, Pa.

I also move to amend by striking out all after the word "Pennsylvania," in line 132.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will be taken on the amendments separately.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT to strike out "fee" and insert "an indefeasible," there were—ayes 54, noes 59.

Mr. HEWITT. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and Mr. HEWITT and Mr. BAYNE were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 59.

Mr. HEWITT. I do not press further the point that no quorum has voted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question being then taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT to strike out all after the word "Pennsylvania," in line 132, down to and including line 137, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to cede to the city of Chester, Pa., the upper and lower piers located in said city and extending into the Delaware River, and formerly used as an ice-harbor, if in his opinion said piers be useless to the Government and their present condition be dangerous to navigation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Improving harbor at Atlantic City, $25,000: Provided, however, That none of this money shall be expended until the plans for said improvement shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee I will occupy a few moments in stating the reasons which lead me to offer this amendment. The coast line between Sandy Hook and Cape May is about 125 miles in length. The distance from Sandy Hook to Atlantic City is about 75 miles, and from Cape May to Atlantic City about 50 miles. It will be seen that the proposed harbor is nearly half way between Sandy Hook and Cape May. It is well known to those who reside upon the seacoast that all the commerce which comes out of the harbor of New York by way of Sandy Hook, bound southerly, passes close to the New Jersey coast. It is also known that this is a low, sandy coast, with outlying sand-bars, and is extremely dangerous to navigation, especially during the prevalence of easterly winds. The extent of that commerce is hardly appreciated.

The keeper of the Atlantic City light-house reports that during one year there passed within the range of his observation, and of which he took actual count during the daytime, eleven thousand four hundred and fifty vessels, or about one every twenty minutes of daylight. This commerce is carried on very largely in sailing vessels, vessels which during the prevalence of easterly storms are largely at the mercy of the elements.

Along this whole line of coast there is no harbor of refuge at low tide for vessels drawing over 8 feet of water, or at high tide for vessels drawing over 12 feet. At Atlantic City there is an inlet, upon the bar of which there is 8 feet at low water and about 12 feet at high water. Just outside of the bar the depth increases very rapidly, and inside of the bar the low-water depth, as reported by Colonel Ludlow, of the Corps of Engineers, reaches 60 feet.

The provision which I have offered is for the purpose of improving the entrance to this harbor, so that it may serve as a harbor of refuge for the commerce passing up and down that coast. All along the coast the wrecks of vessels are to be seen standing like weird sentinels of danger.

A report in favor of this improvement was made by Colonel Ludlow. I feel bound to state that subsequently another report, adverse to the improvement, was made by Major Heuer. But Major Heuer had proposed a certain method of improvement, an arrangement which I do not hesitate to say does not upon inspection at least strike favorably the average lay mind. I have therefore drawn my amendment so as to provide that none of the money shall be spent until the plans for the improvement shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War.

One objection which Major Heuer has to the improvement is, there is not found sufficient anchorage ground within the harbor after it is reached. I have in my possession a letter from Hon. J. J. Gardner, State senator from that county nine years, who is perfectly familiar with the facts, in which he says:

During my first years of acquaintance with the harbor at Absecon Inlet and until 1854 or 1855 the channel went out straight about a southeast course. All the water went out the one channel. There was then over one bar at two-thirds flood from 16 to 17 feet of water. It was not unusual, as I am impressed, to see sixty vessels in that harbor at one time, and among them many "square riggers." I see no reason to doubt that a training jetty, throwing the water into one channel, would restore the channel and harbor of 1854. The great need of a harbor, especially for smaller vessels, for which the breakwater at Delaware Bay is unfit anchorage in a storm, I presume is not denied.

I also have a letter from Capt. John C. Fifield, one of the oldest sea-faring men on that part of the coast, which I should like to read:

BAKERSVILLE, N. J., February 10, 1886.

DEAR SIR: About the years 1844 to 1847 I was frequently in Absecon Inlet for a harbor of refuge from storms; have frequently seen from forty to fifty vessels there at a single time. The most vessels I have known there at a single time was 1851 or 1852, I am not sure which; there were sixty-three, and two of them were square-rigged. That probably was the largest fleet ever known in that harbor. At that time there was about 18 feet at high water. It is a well-known fact that when there are two or three channels out over our bar inlets the water in the main channel is shallow, and when there is only one the channel cuts out deep.

Yours, most respectfully,

JOHN C. FIFIELD.

Hon. JAMES BUCHANAN,
Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to oppose the amendment——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will take the floor, and yield my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask by unanimous consent to be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has yielded his time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Very well; then I will reserve that time.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and in two minutes I can state the reason why this improvement was rejected.

The committee, by unanimous consent, rejected it, first, because it can not be made; second, if it were made, it would not accomplish the object in view; third, if it were made, the engineer reports it would destroy Atlantic City as a bathing-place; and, fourth, it is not a public necessity.

I will call attention, briefly, to the report of the Chief of Engineers, sustaining these four points.

First. It can not be done.

He says:

It is also probable that, owing to the shifting sands of which the beaches and bottom are composed, two jetties, if constructed and extending nearly two miles to seaward, would soon cause the shore lines of both beaches to build out toward the ends of the jetties, and in this event it would not be a very long time before another bar would again form before the outer ends of the jetties.

Second. If they were built they would be of no use.

It is said that during severe storms on this coast the sea sometimes breaks in 6 or 7 fathoms depth of water. It does not require an extraordinarily heavy storm to produce breakers in 3 fathoms depth, and as the outer ends of the jetties will not be in water more than 18 to 20 feet deep, it follows that during such storms, when vessels are most desirous of making a harbor, it would be impracticable for them to enter the comparatively narrow and long channel between the jetties.

Third. It would destroy Atlantic City.

The engineer reports:

It is also probable that the jetties, if built, would destroy, for a considerable time at least, the surf in front of Atlantic City, one of the most attractive features of the place.

Indeed the most attractive feature of the place.

He also says:

The improvement, if made, would be of great local commercial benefit to Atlantic City, but might ruin the fine surf bathing there for several years.

That is a strong appeal on the threshold of a hot summer.

Fourth. It is not a public necessity.

I am not prepared to say that the harbor is not worthy of improvement, but as the cost of making the improvement is far greater than the benefits to be derived therefrom, and as the works, if constructed, would not necessarily effect a permanent improvement, and as there is no public necessity for the works, the deduction from the facts must be that the harbor is not worthy of improvement.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman has said I will say, if I had simply asked for an appropriation, without putting in qualifying words, a portion of his remarks might be in point. I would do nothing to destroy the fine surf bathing at Atlantic City. It is reputed to be the best on the coast, and people come from far and near to enjoy the luxury. It, together with the mild and salubrious climate, has built up a city that is marvelous in beauty, teeming with life and enterprise, and a source of pride to our citizens. I would be the last one to advocate anything that would do that city harm. But in this matter I act in obedience to the request of her mayor and leading citizens, including some of those most interested in maintaining the surf bathing. The gentleman says that if the jetties were built out a bar would form beyond them.

That contingency did not prevent us from voting the erection of the Eads jetties at Port Eads; but I am not favoring this proposition without guarding it, for I have provided that the plans shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War before the money is spent. That is a security against the adoption of any improper plan. When the gentleman says that we can not make this improvement in the way Major Heuer proposes, I admit that his statement is correct. But we do not want the two long jetties he proposes.

When he says that the improvement can not be operative, he assumes that the plans are the same as those proposed by Major Heuer. I am perfectly willing to admit that Major Heuer's plans are not desirable. I do not admit, though, Mr. Chairman, that a proper improvement would destroy the bathing at Atlantic City; I admit that it would, perhaps, if the improvement were carried on as Major Heuer proposes, but not if the improvements are made as the other engineers propose. As to its being a public necessity, I have cited the figures here, which show incontestably that a harbor of refuge on our coast is a public necessity.

By the way, I may remark in passing that it is not always considered, in adopting items in a river and harbor bill, whether there is any public necessity for the work or not. I see many items in the bill of very doubtful necessity.

But in this case I do not hesitate to say, and the figures I have adduced will show it, for they are incontestable, that there is a public necessity for this improvement. We do not advocate it as a local matter solely. It is for the benefit of our commerce which comes out from Sandy Hook and runs down along the coast to enter the Delaware or farther down to enter the Chesapeake, and, in fact, the rivers and inlets all along our Southern shores.

I ask permission, Mr. Chairman, in this connection to also read as a part of my remarks an extract from a memorial prepared by the citizens of that vicinity and signed by the mayor and others of Atlantic City asking for this improvement.

I sincerely hope that, guarded as it is and being a matter of so much interest to our people and importance to our commerce, the amendment will be adopted by this committee.

The extracts referred to by Mr. BUCHANAN are as follows:

To the honorable Committee of the United States House of Representatives on River and Harbor Improvements:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, a committee of citizens of Atlantic City, N. J., and representing the signers to a petition to Congress, asking that an appropriation be made to improve the harbor of that city, respectfully set forth some of the facts and reasons for the improvement and protection to the entrance of the harbor of Atlantic City and the public necessity for the immediate commencement of the work.

LOCATION OF HARBOR AND CITY.

Atlantic City is located on Atlantic Island, one of the long beaches on the New Jersey coast. The island has an ocean front of 9 miles, and is divided from Brigantine beach by Absecon Inlet, the inlet being the entrance to the harbor, which the citizens of Atlantic City and owners of vessel property and others residing in the adjacent towns on the mainland desire to have improved.

The improvement sought is to have the channel-way over the bar at the entrance of the inlet dredged and deepened, and to be protected and straightened by the prolongation of a stone training wall or jetty along the southwesterly side of the channel, beginning at such a point on the city beach near the inlet as in the judgment of the engineers in charge may determine, extending the same to and over the bar, which has now 8 to 9 feet of water, in a straight line, or nearly a straight line, to deep water outside, say 18 feet.

PRESENT APPROACHES TO THE HARBOR.

To facilitate the entrance to the harbor the Government has erected one first-class light-house, near which is located a Government signal station and a life-saving service station.

SIZE AND PRESENT IMPORTANCE OF THE CITY.

The rapid improvement and extension of Atlantic City within the last fifteen years is unequaled on the coast, covering with beautiful avenues over 3 miles of ocean front. The city contains one hundred and twenty city squares, nearly all improved with fine rows of genteel dwellings, handsome cottages, costly hotels, besides numerous schools, churches, theaters, banks, and other public buildings. This city is also the railroad terminus of three lines of railroads, connecting Philadelphia and New York with this popular resort.

ITS CAPACITY AS A SUMMER RESORT.

Atlantic City accommodates during the summer months, with comfortable residences, over seventy thousand inhabitants and guests. Its winter residents and business population number according to recent returns eight thousand persons. Its active business population during the summer months augments this number to about twenty thousand.

IMPORTANCE TO COMMERCE.

The importance of this city to the general commerce of the great business centers of our country, in which Philadelphia derives by means of its three direct railroad lines the largest share, can not be overestimated. From ten to fifteen trains daily arrive during the spring and summer months freighted with provisions, furniture, house-furnishing goods, dry goods, clothing, and miscellaneous merchandise.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO THE COASTING TRADE AND RAILROAD TRAFFIC.

The vessels engaged in the lumber trade bringing lumber to this port average fifty vessels a year of an aggregate tonnage of 20,000 tons capacity. A competent authority, Mr. Richard Turner, estimates the receipts of building lumber by railroads for the same period to be not less than 50,000 tons measurement.

THE BRICK TRADE.

Bricks carried in vessels and delivered at this port are placed at 10,000 tons per annum.

ICE TRADE.

The ice arriving by vessels from eastern ports and conveyed to persons doing business here aggregates 11,000 tons per season.

OYSTER TRADE.

Oyster cargoes are mainly confined to incoming vessels loaded at Virginia ports and other points below the capes with seed oysters for planting, summing up 10,000 tons per year. Of the immense outgoing shipment at present carried on by railroad good authorities place it at 100,000 tons per year.

GROWING VALUE TO COMMERCE AND AGRICULTURE.

The value of this harbor to the commerce of the city and to the commerce of the towns along this part of the coast can not be overestimated. A thousand square miles of fair farming and fruit-growing lands can be brought within reach of two of the largest markets, New York and Boston, by steamboat conveyance, as soon as the bar can be removed or deepened to admit steamers drawing from 15 to 18 feet of water to pass safely over, within which they can find a harbor averaging from 30 to 60 feet of water.

A daily line of steamboats were offered recently, belonging to the New York Iron Steamboat Company, to open this trade, had the water at the entrance of the inlet been found deep enough to admit the passage of these vessels.

ATLANTIC CITY AS A NATURAL HARBOR OF REFUGE.

To Atlantic City as possessing a natural harbor of refuge your main attention is respectfully called. From the very full report made by Col. William Ludlow, United States Engineer Corps, furnished through his chief to the War Department and printed in the reports of that department to Congress in 1881, page 831, we extract the following:

"EXTRACTS FROM COL. WILLIAM LUDLOW'S REPORT.

"Section 2 of the river and harbor act of June 14, 1880, directed a survey of this (Absecon) inlet with a view to an examination of its capacity as a harbor.

"The coast of New Jersey from Sandy Hook to Cape May is 125 miles, and presents the characteristics of a long narrows, and beach, separated from the main land by interior bays and thoroughfares. The tidal currents traversing them maintain a depth sufficient for a restricted navigation.

"The long narrow sea beach is broken at intervals into separate beaches by inlets through which the tide ebbs and flows.

"The principal are five in number, with low water ranging from 7 to 10 feet. Of these Absecon Inlet ranks second.

"The great increase in the number of coasters passing the New Jersey coast and the frequent disasters to shipping from being forced upon the beach in gales suggest the desirability and future necessity for some harbors of refuge, that by means of permanent engineering works shall be so fixed both in position and depth as to admit of their being suitably lighted and entered with safety by at least the smaller classes of trading vessels.

"Absecon Inlet is about 75 miles south of Sandy Hook and 50 miles north of Cape May and separates Absecon beach from Brigantine beach. Its channel of entrance has 8 or 9 feet at least depth at low water, and for three years past has exhibited

AN UNUSUAL STABILITY IN DEPTH AND DIRECTION.

"After crossing the bar the channel deepens until, between the beaches, the low-water depth is 60 feet. The comparatively sheltered area bounded by the 25-foot contour is some 1,200 yards in length by 175 yards in width, and constitutes the present harbor; thence the water diverges westward into Absecon Channel and has a long stretch of 17 to 20 feet draught of water. The main thoroughfare continues the ship-channel, giving good wharfage sites for nearly 3 miles, to Arkansas avenue bridge, where three-masted schooners are frequently seen unloading.

"In 1878 the dangerous encroachment of the sea led the Light-House Establishment to construct a stone jetty. The effect was almost immediate in arresting the erosion of the shore.

POSSIBLE TO IMPROVE THE ENTRANCE BY MEANS OF SUITABLE JETTIES.

"It may be stated that even if improvement shall not be immediately contemplated, a certain care might be exercised to protect these few natural inlets against avoidable injury.

"As it is, this inlet is one of the best natural harbors on the New Jersey coast, the channel depth being about 8 to 9 feet at low water and exhibiting a very considerable degree of permanency both in depth and position for the last two or three years.

"WILLIAM LUDLOW,
"Colonel Corps of Engineers."

[Extracts from accompanying letters of Mr. James Brady.]

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., September 19, 1884.

ATLANTIC CITY AS A HARBOR OF REFUGE.

Statistics bearing upon the importance of this harbor as a harbor of refuge have been but partially collected. I am convinced that there would be such an array of figures that would place our harbor as the best site for a harbor of refuge. From information gathered this harbor has been known and used by mariners as a natural harbor of refuge for vessels passing or coming on this coast ever since the days of William Penn's settlement at New Castle.

Wrecks succeeding wrecks have occurred along this coast in almost monotonous succession, marking the calendar nearly every year with the sad tale of those melancholy monuments. No printed record reaches further back (known to me) than the year 1820, with the exception of three wrecks that happened during the war periods between our country and Great Britain. Those dusty annals begin with the name of one vessel, the ship Andrew, on Long Beach, from Liverpool, laden with a rich assorted cargo. The vessel was a total loss and the fate of the unfortunate crew remains unknown.

In those years of greatest activity of our merchant marine, when it was proudly claimed that our ships equaled in numbers that of all other maritime nations combined, a period when large, square-rigged vessels were extensively employed in the coasting trade, as many living must have witnessed among the forest of masts in New York Harbor, canvas banners flying from their foreyards, marked, "For Charleston," "For New Orleans," "Savannah," "Mobile," "Galveston," &c., there appears of record but one or two vessels each succeeding year, when it was well known by people residing along the coast that ten times that number were lost on the sand beaches of New Jersey.

THREE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN VESSELS LOST ON THIS COAST.

When a ship struck in those times the vessel, cargo, and crew were generally lost. Not so now, thank Providence and the Life-Saving Service. In Dr. T. T. Price's Historical Atlas of New Jersey I find authentic accounts of the loss of three hundred and eighteen vessels, lost on this coast within the period of fifty years, ending in 1877.

Included in this number is the packet ship John Mintern, then on a voyage from New Orleans to New York, resulting in great loss of life. She went on the beach in a snow storm. The writer lost a much esteemed school mate, Mr. Hartle, one of the officers of the ship. After swimming ashore he perished, frozen to death.

Major Wolf, keeper of the Atlantic City light-house, has furnished me with authentic record of the loss, within the limits of his light-house district (10 miles sea front) of twenty-one vessels lost within the period of ten years last past, of which number he furnished the names, dates, and location of the wrecks for the objects intended by this letter.

The same authority also furnished a memorandum of an important record kept by him up to a recent period of the number of vessels seen passing in and out of Absecon Inlet during the year 1882 (since which time these duties devolved on the officer in charge of the life-saving service here), to wit: During the eight storm months, in which the employment of life-saving crews were required, there passed in and out 1,800 vessels, or its equivalent, vessels making in all eighteen hundred runs, and during the four summer months in the same year he noted 2,534 vessels as entering or departing this harbor, or, as before stated, vessels making that many runs. Many of these vessels were large vessels; some were steamers. Of the large numbers mentioned in the winter months, many were in addition to the vessels employed in the freighting business, fishing vessels engaged in the ocean fisheries, and as deserving of protection as freight vessels.

Number of coasters and foreign vessels, as seen by him passing his light during daylight, in clear weather, for the period of one year, counted 11,450.

In this connection I must here recall your remembrance of the statement made by the above-named gentleman, that on the day preceding your arrival here to examine the harbor, the 13th instant, a caution signal displayed at the United States signal station brought into this natural harbor of refuge, in quick succession, no less than seven laden schooners, one steamer, and two barges in tow, some of which squadron remained here until after your departure. All others sighting the signal that could not enter had to stand off the coast.

I have the honor to remain, &c.,

JAMES BRADY.

To Major HEUER, Engineer Corps, U. S. A.:

ANSWER TO MAJOR HEUER'S OBJECTION TO INCUR THE EXPENSE NECESSARY TO IMPROVE THIS HARBOR FOR THE PROTECTION OF ONLY THE SMALLER CLASS OF COASTING VESSELS.

While the smaller class of coasting vessels are admitted, by the testimony of Colonel Ludlow and other competent authority, to be the most numerous of our coasting trade, and least capable, when loaded, to cope with stormy weather and the common dangers of the sea, this report seems to take no account. This officer leaves them outside, as if they had no business there in bad weather, to the makeshift of their too often short-handed crews, perhaps to founder, going down with all on board (as known to have frequently happened), or fortunately beached, thankful to the Life-Saving Service that the vessel and cargo are the only loss! If it is unfortunate for Atlantic City, it is nevertheless fortunate for the owners and crews of this useful class of vessels to find in the citizens of Atlantic City men generous enough to plead the cause of the distressed mariner without regard to the size of the vessel in which he may have ventured his life and fortune.

Major Heuer's compound objection "is that the improvement, if made, would be of great local commercial benefit to Atlantic City, but might ruin the fine surf-bathing there for several years."

The answer to the first part of this singular sentence can only be that Atlantic City can take care of her own commerce, but if she received but a moiety of the favors that other harbors of less commercial importance receive at the hands of the Government, in the nature of improvements, she would improve her opportunities with much more certainty than many so favored, which is just the pith and purpose of nearly all such undertakings.

To the second part of his sentence of condemnation, which might be taken as one of the Major's hygienic jokes, which says, "might ruin the fine surf-bathing," &c., we have but to answer, according to his judgment, the jetties may prove of doubtful utility in protecting the harbor from the violent encroachment of the sea, it nevertheless seems to him certain that the jetties, if constructed, would becalm the troubled waters of the ocean outside. For this last dreamed-of blessing we invoke no sympathy! The destruction of public and private property along the Boardwalk (beach front) by the violent action of the sea at times for the last five or six years would equal a considerable moiety of the proposed cost of the work. Even a partial relief from the constant anxiety entailed would be a grateful boon to the sufferers.

AN IMPORTANT ADMISSION.

The concluding remarks of this report contain the following important admission: "I am not prepared to say that the harbor is not worthy of improvements."

A SINGLE TRAINING WALL ONLY REQUIRED.

A single training wall or jetty here recommended by this committee is consistent with the present wants of the harbor and economy of construction. The method proposed calls for not over one and a half miles of jetty (instead of some four miles of stone walls, as suggested by Major Heuer's report). His estimate called for $900,000 to finish the work; our estimate can not equal one-third of that sum, with the cost of dredging added, which can not be considerable, as the ebb-current when the material is once loosened must carry out a large percentage of the silt, which fact is known to take place; the ebb-tide carrying to sea over the bar the sand that may enter the channel during the flood. For confirmation of this phenomena we respectfully refer to Capt. C. W. Howell's report and that of his assistant, H. C. Collins (vol. 2, part 1, pages 935 and 937, W. D. reports 1879), referring to Aransas Pass, in which he briefly says: "The fact that so large a quantity of sand deposited each day at flood tide on this mile of channel and that the channel does not fill up but remains 25 to 35 feet deep, proves that the sand brought in at the flood (by this and another contributing channel) is carried out at the ebb-tide over the bar."

Other important data bearing on this subject is derived from part of Col. William Ludlow's report, page 841, where his assistant, Mr. G. Daubeney, gives in substance, that nearly one-fourth of the tide water entering by the way of Brigantine channel, the northeasterly channel at the Inlet, does not return to the sea by that channel.

The sand entering by the channel way on the Brigantine side at the flood, is carried along with what it erodes or cuts from Brigantine beach (which to common observers is being rapidly washed away), must pass out as it were syphoned, by the way of the greater channel of the Inlet. Two shore jetties of say about 200 yards each in length if placed on the Brigantine side, could not fail to diminish this unusual deluge of sand that passes out of the harbor by the main channel, or obtain lodgment along its westerly bank and on the beach front, by way of an outlet over the westerly shoal near the bar, making considerable land.

For about a mile east of the main channel this new branch of the ebb current, as it passes along the beach in front of the city, drops the thick of the sand drift, when it at once recommences the work of destruction, lowering the beach, cutting the front of some very valuable property. From the course it is taking it promises to divide the island in a diagonal line north of west, bidding fair to leave the Excursion House and its surroundings in the near future outside of the city Boardwalk. "The timely erection of the proposed jetty would no doubt avert this impending disaster."

AN APPROPRIATION OF $75,000 ASKED TO COMMENCE THE WORK.

In conclusion your committee would respectfully ask for an appropriation of $75,000, or such sum as may be alloted by Congress, to commence the work. No other place on the coast can be selected more suitable for a harbor of refuge possessing the advantages it possesses for repairs and transportation by railroad.

We have the honor to be, &c.,

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will not prevail. There is no business done that is demanding the improvement he suggests. This has been considered carefully by the committee, and they did not deem it worthy of an appropriation. It is utterly impossible for a member of the committee to vote for this proposition on this report of the engineers.

The amendment of Mr. BUCHANAN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Wilmington, Del.: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

The comittee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so that it will read "twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. LORE. I move to amend by striking out "twenty-five," as proposed by the committee, and inserting "seventy-five," so that it will read $75,000 for improving harbor at Wilmington, Del.

I want to say, sir, that there were some facts which came to my notice after I had had an opportunity of appearing before the committee, and which of course I could not at that time lay before them. I need hardly say to a House as intelligent as this that the city of Wilmington in this regard is entitled at least to some little consideration. We pay over $233,000 annually into the national Treasury. It is a city of about 50,000 people. It employs eight thousand men in our workshops and pays annually in wages over $3,000,000, with a capital invested of over $10,000,000, and yearly in our workshops products of a value in excess of $13,000,000 are turned out.

We have, sir, there four large ship-building establishments—that of Enoch Moore, jr., the Jackson and Sharp Company, the Pusey and Jones Company, and the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company. Two of these, the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company and the Pusey and Jones Company, compete successfully with the builders of steam-vessels on the Clyde, and they have taken from those builders much of the work. the Pusey and Jones Company have constructed in their shops large numbers of river steamers, which ply to-day on the South American waters. They are acknowledged to be models of beauty, speed, and utility, excelling in all respects their English competitors. They are fit types of the enterprise of Wilmington mechanics and builders under most adverse circumstances, and manifest the possibilities of American ship-building under equal conditions. I need scarcely refer to so well-known an establishment as the Harlan and Hollingsworth Company.

It is known all over the country. Members from the Pacific coast doubtless know the steamer Olympia, built by this company, one of the finest vessels that plies on Puget Sound. On Long Island Sound we have the City of Worcester, one of the very finest that plies on any waters, a floating palace in fact, while I think our friends on the Gulf have there the Excelsior, a vessel of like character, all built by this company. These are only three of the great number of these vessels now floating in all the waters of our country. Mr. Chairman, we have over two hundred vessels that are documented in the port of Wilmington engaged in commerce in the district. We have over five hundred thousand in tonnage.

The condition of the harbor to-day is this: If you appropriate $25,000 for us as the harbor now stands, with the jetty which has proved somewhat imperfect, it will not enable us to accomplish the work that is required. Seventy-five thousand dollars will enable us to do it all. Twenty-five thousand dollars I think would enable us to do but little of the work, and the work thus incomplete and subject to injury while waiting for further appropriations——

Mr. RANDALL obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. LORE.

Mr. LORE. I beg to thank the member from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] for his courtesy. It is very rarely, Mr. Speaker, that I trespass upon the time of the House, but I desire to present this question most earnestly, because it is a matter of importance to my people. I do not present this amendment in any factious spirit toward the committee. They have done, I know, what they believe to be just and equitable in all cases; but I do not believe that the condition of that work has been fully or fairly apprehended by the committee. For $25,000 we could accomplish something. In proper cases there should be an exercise of discretion. This is one of them. With $75,000 we can do the work in such a way that it will not be necessary to come here and ask dribs from year to year.

You may do work in such a way by partly completing it as to leave much of it in a condition to be destroyed before you succeed in doing the entire work. By dribbing out little by little, year after year, you accomplish little, if anything, in the end. An appropriation of $75,000 given now for that port to permit the finishing and cleaning out of the channels and the completion of the jetties, which will be perfect in themselves when thus done, will be better than $150,000 or $200,000 spread over several years, $20,000 or $25,000 at a time.

There is an economy in doing what you have to do promptly and at once. If the work be a necessary work, then the sooner it can be done for a reasonable expenditure the better. And I do say to this committee that from a conference with a local engineer I am satisfied that if $25,000 be given to-day and used in that work, ten thousand dollars' worth of the work would have to be done over again in another year. The engineers report $166,000 are necessary to complete the work. They recommend $75,000 for this year; $25,000 is the amount reported by the committee. I ask again of this House for $75,000, and I ask it with a sincere desire to provide that the public money shall not be used improperly or wasted. Give us now the $75,000, and I think we shall not be likely to trouble the committee again for some time.

Two steam freight and passenger lines—the Charles Warren Company and George W. Bush & Sons—employing propellers, tugs, and tenders, are connecting the port with Philadelphia and New York, running daily lines. There are also three passenger steamers making daily trips to Philadelphia and to points in New Jersey.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The argument that if an appropriation of $25,000 only is made it is bad economy and that an appropriation now of $75,000 is of more value than of $25,000 a year for three years to come is an argument you will find applicable perhaps to one-half of all the items in this bill. While I fully appreciate the force of it, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if we had made our appropriation on the basis claimed by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] this bill would reach $43,000,000. The item at Wilmington, the item under consideration, is put upon the basis of 33⅓ per cent. of the engineers' estimate. If the other items were put upon the same basis the total of this bill would be greater than its present aggregate. There is nothing shown in the case of Wilmington that makes it a stronger case for deviating from some sort of adherence to a necessary rule than might be shown in every instance in the whole line of the estimates. It is true that in some cases we have proposed to appropriate all that is required, in others we have rejected the whole, and in some cases we have made the total appropriation less than 20 per cent. of the estimate.

In this particular case, while it may be true the port of Wilmington is a profitable one to the Government, there is nothing shown to justify going outside of the percentage that we are compelled to be limited by. The argument which the gentleman from Delaware makes, if applied to the port of New York, would give to that port most of the money that is appropriated in this bill.

Mr. LORE. I ask the gentleman whether other ports are not in this condition—that much of the work already done will be lost if a sufficient expenditure to continue it is not made?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is a statement by the engineers in two-thirds of the estimates, and made for the consideration of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This appropriation had to its credit $17,000. We proposed for $20,000 additional and have changed that to $25,000. I have no feeling or interest in it. But the argument that it would be more economical in the long run to appropriate the larger amount is an argument we can give very little weight to except in special cases.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to say only a word. I fully recognize the commercial importance of this harbor, and this case only illustrates, as my colleague on the committee has stated, the embarrassment of the committee. The estimate of the engineers is $75,000. We recommend $25,000. There were $17,000 on hand on the 1st of July. So that there will be a greater amount than has been expended in the last four fiscal years. I therefore say to the gentleman from Delaware that within the limits of a small bill, small as compared with the estimates of the engineers, we have done the best we could.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Delaware to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The question being taken on Mr. LORE'S amendment to strike out "$25,000" from the committee's amendment and insert "$75,000," it was not agreed to.

The amendment of the committee to strike out "$20,000" from the bill and insert "$25,000" was agreed to.

Improving harbor at Baltimore, Md.: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Mr. COMPTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

In line 153, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$170,000."

Mr. COMPTON. I desire to say just a word. I believe in the theories of the old men who in former times held that bills having such provisions as this were not strictly in keeping with the provisions of the Constitution. But the policy of Congress under this Government has determined that question otherwise, and I am therefore in line with those who favor liberal appropriations for general improvements. It strikes me, however, that these appropriations should be made with reference to the national character of the point proposed to be improved.

What do we find in this appropriation bill? We find in the State of West Virginia the Kanawha River asking and receiving at the hands of this committee an appropriation of $125,000; this for a local stream affecting only one State and the people of one State, so far as I am informed. I am not disposed to quarrel with my friends from West Virginia. I give them credit for having obtained so much for their gallant little State, and I shall vote for the appropriation.

I find, sir, that the city of Charleston receives at the hands of the committee in this bill $250,000; improving Cumberland Sound, in Florida and Georgia, $150,000; improving the harbor of Savannah, $125,000; improving the harbor of Mobile, $120,000. Now, gentlemen may say that the city of Baltimore has received already $2,000,000 for the improvement of its harbor. That is true, sir; but the city of Baltimore has also received from the State of Maryland and appropriations of the city itself largely over half a million dollars. Baltimore is emphatically a port in which all the West and Northwest and the Southwest is directly interested. Her great railroad, penetrating to your extreme Northwest and West and South and Southwest, brings to that port the trade and commerce of the whole country. I have made the amendment cover $170,000, because the engineers in reporting upon this proposition say that they have $30,000 on hand and that $200,000 can be used judiciously during the coming year. This amendment will make the available sum $200,000. In my humble opinion that is not more than is required, nor more than should be received from this Government for the improvement of that great harbor, and I submit it to the fair judgment, the candor, the liberality, the sense of justice of this House. I appeal to the Representatives of all sections of the country, because this is a national improvement, in which the entire country is interested.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that, fully recognizing the great importance of the port of Baltimore, although it has no representative on the committee, we gave it as much in proportion to the estimate as any other harbor in the United States. We gave Baltimore 50 per cent., while to the harbor in South Carolina which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] has mentioned we allowed but 33 per cent., and to the Great Kanawha 33⅓ per cent. We have done more for Baltimore than for two-thirds of the harbors of the country and as much as we have done for any harbor in the United States. The engineer reports that $200,000 will complete the existing project for the improvement of the harbor. There is $30,000 already on hand; the harbor itself is in good condition; we have given half the amount that is called for by the report of the engineer, and the next river and harbor bill will probably give the other half. Then my friend's occupation, so far as river and harbor bills are concerned, will be gone forever, and we took that into consideration in dividing the appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. COMPTON. Why make two bites of one cherry?

Mr. WILLIS. Because the cherry in this instance was too large for the mouth of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. COMPTON. May I ask the gentleman what percentage he gives the Great Kanawha?

Mr. WILLIS. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars was the estimate.

Mr. McCOMAS. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to say that the amount on hand for the improvement of the harbor of Baltimore is $30,000. I have no doubt he thought that was correct.

Mr. WILLIS. Not now on hand, but on hand at the beginning of the present fiscal year.

Mr. McCOMAS. That amount has been very much reduced, and the small sum that is now on hand has been retained only because of the apprehension that there might be a failure to appropriate here.

Mr. Chairman, I only want to add to what my colleague has said, that Baltimore is one of the great harbors of the country, and that its improvement is in the hands of a most competent, careful, and moderate engineer; so that when Colonel Craighill after years of experience says it will require an appropriation of $200,000, that does not mean that they ask $200,000 in the hope of getting $100,000, but it means that $200,000 is actually needed. That estimate is veritable, bona fide, not inflated, and therefore I trust that the amendment of my colleague will prevail. The new cut-off channel, which shortens the channel between the Craighill and Brewerton channels, is now being excavated, deepened, and enlarged. I shall most heartily vote for the amendment proposed by my colleague, and I am confident that no wiser act can be done in connection with this bill than the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I want to make just one general remark as to the scaling of this forty millions of appropriations. I have no words of deprecation for any member on this floor looking to his own local interest and the interest of his constituency in respect to appropriations. The item in which I am more directly interested—the appropriation for Buffalo Harbor—has by some means been scaled down to about 26½ per cent. of the estimate. I want to present to members of the House, and particularly to members of the committee, this fact, that as a Representative upon this floor looking to the object of passing this bill now, I have not raised any point against any appropriation where the committee have seen fit to give 33 per cent., or even, as in the case of Baltimore, 50 per cent. The harbor of Buffalo in the last thirty years has turned into the Treasury of the United States, free of all dues and cost of collection, over $10,000,000; yet I, as its Representative, find no ground on which to cavil at the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; I take the appropriation as it comes from that committee, being only 26½ per cent. of the estimate, and I accept it, hoping that all other conservative members of this House will do likewise, so that we may progress the bill and reach a conclusion without stump-speeching every creek and every harbor as it comes up. [Applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in support of the view taken by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We have allowed the city of Baltimore 50 per cent. of the entire amount asked for by the engineers, and there is no port upon the Atlantic coast to which so large an appropriation has been given in proportion to the estimates as to Baltimore. That fact, sir, comes of the judgment of the committee, that there is no port which can properly make a larger claim upon Congress for an appropriation. But it will be found by gentlemen who examine the report of the engineers that the harbor of Baltimore is already nearly completed.

One reason, sir, why the committee was willing to deal liberally with Baltimore is that she has done very much for herself. Baltimore is one of the places on our coast where the citizens themselves have, from the beginning, very liberally appropriated from their own means for work of this kind. We have found that in the case of Baltimore there was no special exigency, no pressing need. The engineer himself says that the depth required at this harbor—27 feet—has been obtained, and only a little more width of channel is necessary. It is admitted by Colonel Craighill himself, one of the most competent engineers on the whole coast, that the sides of the channel are composed of material so soft that vessels suffer no injury if they happen to impinge upon the borders of the channel. Therefore there is no pressing reason why this work should be hurried and finished earlier than work of a similar character which is proceeding under the appropriations of Congress.

Mr. McCOMAS. The gentleman will allow me to say that the channel of that harbor is intended to be 27 feet——

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Twenty-seven feet in depth.

Mr. McCOMAS. When the channel was first cut there was not a sufficient appropriation to make the channel of the width naturally required by the scheme of the work, and it was cut about one-half the contemplated width. Since that time it has been by degrees cut wider and wider, but at no point in the four branches of the channel have they yet been able to reach the natural and necessary width as projected by Colonel Craighill.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. It is entirely true, as the gentleman from Maryland says, that these channels have not yet the width which it is the desire of the engineer that they should have.

Mr. McCOMAS. And the width which is needed.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. No doubt the interest of commerce would be promoted if they were widened, but it is equally true that a depth of 27 feet, which is the main object, has been obtained, and it is stated in the report that the lack of the necessary width is not a material obstacle to commerce, because if vessels happen to impinge upon the sides of the channel no damage is done, as those sides are of soft material, and a vessel which happens to touch them in passing is not injured. If the work be continued on the plan proposed, it will be completed in about two years, and this, when we take into consideration the other work conducted by the Government, is doing liberally for the city of Baltimore.

Mr. COMPTON. The engineer says that when a steamer touches the sides of the channel no injury results if the steamer is traveling at a low rate of speed, but there might be and would be injury if the steamer were traveling at the ordinary and proper speed.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 34, noes 56.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Breton Bay, Maryland: Continuing improvement, $6,500.

Mr. McADOO. I move to strike out lines 151 and 152.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order that we have passed those lines.

Mr. McADOO. I tried to get the attention of the Chair before the Clerk had passed those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman address the Chair?

Mr. McADOO. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIS. I make the point of order that we had passed that portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman states that he addressed the Chair as soon as those lines were read; and under these circumstances his motion is in order.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this item is not because I specially oppose the improvement of this harbor at Breton Bay, Maryland, but I object to it in order to call attention to this as one of the typical mistakes, if not blunders, of this bill. I have in my hand the report of the Secretary of War, and referring to page 145 I find this appropriation relates to the improvement of a harbor for a town of twelve hundred inhabitants, drawing the commerce for about 18 miles around, I think. There is really no great interstate commerce at this place. There is no constitutional right for Federal interference and outlay. In fact, so far as I can learn from this report, there is no interstate commerce such as would allow this Government to spend money for this purely local or State improvement. The report of the engineer states that to carry out this improvement will cost $26,000. Now, if this is a fact, an appropriation of $6,500 in this bill to begin this $26,000 improvement at this small, obscure harbor is entirely inadequate, and is just $6,500 of public money wasted—taken from the whole people and thrown away in the waters of sweet Breton Bay.

There are in this bill many legitimate interstate projects; but, as the gentleman from Maryland frankly admitted a moment ago, there has grown up in Congress the custom of being perfectly oblivious to the constitutional provision that only interstate commerce and waters of general importance shall be improved, and little local harbors like this in Maryland, of no national importance, obscure rivers that were scarcely ever heard of by even the most advanced and adventurous geographers, are brought into this bill in conjunction with legitimate improvements which ought to pass. Casey's Creek, Buncombe Bay, Rollaway River, private mill-ponds, and local drains or canals are not legitimate constitutional Federal improvements. So gentlemen like myself, in favor of every legitimate, honest improvement that will benefit labor and the country at large, find ourselves, by the solemnity of our oaths to support the Constitution and a sense of honest dealing with the people obliged to vote against bills of this character. I deeply regret it. In the reading of this bill I singled out this particular item somewhat at random and with no especial reference to Breton Harbor, Maryland, not because I have any opposition to it in particular, but as typical of the way in which the river and harbor bill is running to seed and as illustrating how this House, whenever it finds the Constitution of the United States interposing between it and the Treasury, jumps through it with the facility of a circus acrobat through a paper-covered hoop. Let us, especially on this side of the House, cry "Halt!" and return to the Constitution, in the interest of good, honest, and economic government. If we do not, popular vengeance will soon overtake us. The people do not, let us hope, want powerful, paternal, and extravagant government. There is one thing sure, the Constitution is against it.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I stated briefly what my general views were when I was up before. Now, my friend from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] does not seem to know the whereabouts of this harbor, Breton Bay, Maryland. I will tell him it is a harbor where three steamers, as I am informed, ply regularly. It is the county town of the old mother county, Saint Mary's. It drains a fertile and populous region, and if any provision in this bill can be considered outside of general provisions for harbors of national importance and those kept within the interpretation of the Constitution which the practice of the Government has adopted, then this is one of them.

We have not reached New Jersey yet, but when we do I hope my friend will be consistent. When we reach that portion of the bill I trust he will give some reason for improving the very many small rivers and harbors in that State for which appropriations are spread out.

Mr. McADOO. When we come to that portion of the bill the gentleman will find that my action will be consistent.

Mr. COMPTON. In looking over the bill I find a great many little rivers entirely unknown to me, although it was my good fortune for four years to dwell in old Nassau Hall. I have a weakness for the old State, and yet, although I have studied its geography carefully, I find here the names of rivers which I never heard of before.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO'S amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Commencing at Lambert's Point Light;" so it will read:

"Continuing improvement by widening the channel of Elizabeth River to the port-warden's line on the eastern side, between Lambert's Point light and Fort Norfolk, $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Beaufort, N. C.: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. SKINNER. I move to strike out "$15,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$84,000."

The last engineer report recommends that $84,000 be appropriated to finish this work. As a general thing the policy of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in making horizontal cuts of estimates of the engineers may possibly do, yet I believe I can show this item is entirely outside of any such rule. Its importance is of such a character as to make it an exception. It is the first harbor south of Cape Hatteras; and it is not only necessary as a harbor of refuge for the commerce of North Carolina, but indeed for the commerce of the whole world. Last winter, during the coldest snap we had, a schooner along that coast in attempting to get into the harbor was wrecked and six of the crew were frozen to death in sight of the people of Beaufort, who were looking on and unable to get there to render assistance. If this harbor had been improved, that schooner could have entered the harbor safely and this loss of life would have been prevented.

In the report of the engineers it is said this amount ought to be appropriated at once in a single sum to finish this important work. Why did they say so? Because, Mr. Chairman, this is tide water; and to adopt the policy of the committee, as it has been doing for years, I make this point, that to continue that policy is merely nip and tuck between the engineers and the tide—nip with the engineers and tuck with the tide. [Laughter.] That is each year doing away with what the engineers did the year before. [Renewed laughter.] It is like the policy of the man who has plenty of money in his pocket, and yet prefers giving his note at 18 or 20 per cent. interest to taking the money out of his pocket and paying with the funds which he has on hand and saving that interest. The economical way here in my judgment would be to appropriate money enough to complete this important work, and have at the earliest practicable moment a safe harbor at this point for the shipping of the country.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Edenton Bay, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $2,000.

Mr. SKINNER. As the committee will not favor me in adopting my amendment for a large addition, I propose in this case to make a small one, but quite as necessary. I move to strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The engineers report that $5,000 will finish that work, and yet the committee only appropriate here $2,000. That is a very large horizontal cut on $5,000. If we only appropriate $2,000 here, it will be with the prospect of spending $2,000 next year and so on, and at the end it will cost far more than it would if we had appropriated $5,000 and finished this work.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from North Carolina is mistaken in his statement that the engineers have stated $5,000 would complete the work. According to that statement more than enough has been spent already on the work to complete it. Now there will be available on the 1st of July $3,742, and the committee gives $2,000 in addition—making $5,742 for this work. They asked really for $8,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. SKINNER. But why, if the recommendation is so small, is not enough given to finish the work at once?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the increase in this bill to forty or fifty millions of dollars if gentlemen so insist, for I can say to them that before we get through, by doubling up little amounts, little appropriations, it will increase the bill to a large sum, perhaps larger than they even dream of, in the end.

Mr. Chairman, the policy of the committee has been to try to make appropriations in proportion to the needs of the particular work under consideration. Now it is true, when a great government has a job in view to complete which will cost $8,000, that to appropriate but $2,000 would seem to be a small business; but it is equally true that the gentleman from North Carolina does not give any possible reason, from the report of the engineers, why the report of the committee should be abandoned and this increase made; and if he will carefully consider the report of the engineers he will discover that he has been treated pretty well after all by getting this appropriation rather than having it rejected altogether.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SKINNER, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Charleston, including Sullivan's Island, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in lines 171 and 172, by striking out "two hundred and fifty thousand" and inserting "one hundred thousand."

We seem now to have reached that portion of the bill where expansion of appropriations is the order of the day. When I first took up this river and harbor bill and commenced to read it I fancied that perhaps the Committee on Rivers and Harbors had this year attempted to report to the House an economical river and harbor appropriation bill. To that I did not at all object. If this is an era of economy and reform, I am quite satisfied to join in that policy. If, on the other hand, it is desirable to make a fairly liberal appropriation bill, providing for these rivers and harbors which are legitimate matters for national appropriations, I am also quite glad to join in a policy looking to that end. But I do most earnestly and seriously object to the character of a bill which, like the bill which was so severely criticised in the last session of the last Congress, discriminates in the same manner concerning these appropriations.

No one who has followed the course of this bill as it has been read in this committee has failed to observe that all along the North Atlantic coast the appropriations have been of an extremely limited and meager character. I did not even presume to present to the House any amendments increasing appropriations provided by this bill for works under construction in my own State. But I do ask the committee to earnestly and fairly consider whether the great appropriations which this bill proposes shall be made throughout the sections of the country where they are provided for, when equally deserving objects of appropriations along our Northern coasts are left to starve, as it were, for want of a somewhat commensurate appropriation.

We have now struck, as it seems to me, I repeat, the expansive portion of the bill. I wish gentlemen to understand that I am not attacking the particular harbor of Charleston. I am not intending to say that the amount that this bill proposes to appropriate can not be properly expended in the mode proposed in the improvement of that harbor; but I do say that in the great harbor in my own State, where we have been limited to the paltry amount of $35,000 by this bill, the commercial necessities and the commercial interests are vastly in excess not only of this Charleston Harbor but of other harbors following along in almost consecutive succession here under this appropriation bill; for instance, the harbor at Brunswick, Ga., $30,000; improvement of Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida, $150,000——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, was recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the criticism of the gentleman from Rhode Island——

Mr. LONG. I suppose the gentleman from West Virginia would not object to allowing the gentleman from Rhode Island to continue for five minutes longer, which would enable him to conclude his remarks, after which the gentleman can resume the floor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I should have no objection if I do not lose my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will lose his time if he yields it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I say, Mr. Chairman, is not subject to the criticism of the gentleman from Rhode Island. There is not a single feature in this bill, or that has been left out of this bill, that will justify the remarks which he has made. There has been no sectional appropriation. If the gentleman will look at the reports of the engineers in relation to his Northern harbors he will find that there is not a single harbor of the North that has been treated with less consideration or justice than has been done to those at Charleston and elsewhere to which he refers. But while it is true that there has not been as much appropriated for Northern harbors in the main, it is because the engineers have recognized such appropriations as unnecessary and have not recommended them, and for the good reason that the water in those harbors is much deeper, that commerce has nearly all the facilities which it desires, and consequently there was no need for the expenditure of vast sums of money.

Why do gentlemen want money expended on harbors not recommended by the engineers, as in the case of the gentleman from Rhode Island for the particular harbor to which he refers? We are simply making the appropriations, not for the purpose of giving to each section just so much money, but for the purpose of improving those harbors that need them, in accordance, as far as we can, with the recommendations, to the end that commerce may be benefited and harbors and rivers improved where needed.

The gentleman well knows that in the harbor of Charleston a great deal of money is required to afford anything like half the amount of facilities for commerce that he has in his harbor. The harbor is stopped up. It was injured during the war and can not be improved without this expenditure.

The committee has acted upon the advice of engineer officers submitted to it and has undertaken to deal fairly with all sections of the country, and any one who will raise here now a sectional cry not only does the committee injustice but does himself injustice.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I regret very much that the gentleman from Rhode Island should make the sort of objection he does to this appropriation. For myself, born in New England and raised just over the Alleghany Mountains, I have no wish to do injustice to that great section of country. But I want to say to the gentleman from Rhode Island, if we are to discuss this river and harbor bill like two children quarreling about the division of the candy and cake, we shall exhibit a spectacle to the American people that will be unseemly and improper.

There is not an item of this appropriation that I am not more or less familiar with, and I undertake to say when the committee examines all the circumstances and all the history of this appropriation it will be disposed to give its approval at the point where the gentleman from Rhode Island undertook to turn away the calm judgment of this committee from the consideration of the real questions before it into a controversy about geographical lines. The harbor that the gentleman complains about in his own State began to have appropriations made for it as far back as in 1852. Some of the works in the Southern States I agree have apparently large appropriations or large estimates. This is because they are comparatively new, or else they are affected by some special circumstances, as in the case of Charleston Harbor. We give on the gentleman's harbor a percentage quite above the standard we were compelled to adopt generally. If we had given in the same proportion to Charleston Harbor it would have received a much larger amount. The estimates of the engineers for the Charleston Harbor were $1,750,000. They asked for the current year $750,000 and we gave $250,000, or 33⅓ per cent., much less than in the case of the Baltimore appropriation, which the committee refused to disturb.

I beg the committee on this point will make a careful scrutiny of this appropriation on the basis of the business circumstances which surround them; and let us fight out this Northern and Southern question and this rebel-brigadier question upon some other issue than the improvements of the water ways of the country, in the improvement of which, I thank God, I have a common interest with the Representative from Brazos Santiago. And whenever the time comes that I feel any different interests in the appropriations of money for the common improvement of the water ways of this country, I want to have a voice in the distribution of the fund. [Applause.]

Mr. DIBBLE. The harbor of Charleston, to which the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] has alluded, and in regard to which he proposes this amendment, is a harbor of national importance, which has been recognized as such by the applications to this House of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, of the Chamber of Commerce of Baltimore, and of the boards of trade and transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, of Louisville, Ky., and other prominent centers of trade in this country, uniting with the citizens of Charleston to ask in the interest of interstate commerce and of international commerce that this harbor shall be improved. The project is one that was initiated by one of the finest engineers of the Army—one whose reputation this House fully recognizes without any eulogium from me—I mean General Q. A. Gillmore, of the Army. It has been approved by a board of engineers composed of the highest officers of the service.

But more than that, with the disadvantages of interrupted appropriations in an improvement that goes out into the ocean, subject to wind and wave, despite interruptions and disadvantages, the practical results already achieved in the work of the engineers indicate that the project will be completely successful. The engineer in charge says that while it was at first a tentative project, there is now no doubt of its success. It will give to Charleston deep water. And Charleston to-day has her lines of railroad by way of Augusta, Ga., by way of Charlotte and of Asheville, N. C., going across the Blue Ridge and stretching to the West; she has her coast lines, reaching along the whole Atlantic seaboard; and she opens up an ocean harbor, which, if the gentleman from Rhode Island will consult a globe and take a point like Chicago, Cincinnati, or Louisville, and trace to Rio Janerio and other points on the great South American coast, he will find is exactly in the line of that traffic—an air line. And Charleston furnishes the terminal point of a route south of the icebergs, secure at all seasons of the year, for ocean travel to and from European ports; while it is also the largest city on our Atlantic coast south of Hatteras, and has a large coastwise trade. There is no controversy about the success of the improvement with any one who has examined the project and the facts stated by the engineers. I therefore confidently leave the harbor of Charleston in the hands of this committee, being satisfied that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island will be rejected.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Chairman, this is a small river and harbor bill, and who is interested in it if New England and New York are not? Who wants the Southern ports opened and improved if New York and New England do not? We receive all their lumber; three-fourths of all their products go to New York and New England. Some of the strongest letters I have received as a member of this committee, asking for the improvement of Southern rivers and harbors, have been from New York men. New York is interested in this bill more than any other State in the Union. Michigan, too, has been mentioned. Every New York man wants the great water ways of Michigan and of all the West improved. I do not believe that this short-sighted method of dealing with this question will win. It ought not to win, for it is not right. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not wonder that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entirely in favor of the distribution made by this river and harbor bill. He suggests that it would be very unwise for us to quarrel over the distribution of these appropriations like children quarreling over the distribution of candy. It certainly would be very unwise for the child that has absorbed all the candy to quarrel over the distribution of it, and in that sense the gentleman's comparison is perhaps a correct one. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] suggests that there have been no localities considered in framing this bill, no sectionalism. In a sense that may be true, but in another sense the gentleman is wofully mistaken. There are $10,000,000 appropriated to States and improvements within the limits of States, and eleven gentlemen upon the committee that draughted this bill have secured more than six millions out of a total of ten millions. And yet we are told that there is no locality favored, no sectionalism in this bill.

The gentleman [Mr. JONES] from Alabama, that great commercial State, was exceedingly indignant the other day that any one should venture to criticise this bill, yet that gentleman, with his usual modesty, has secured for his State over $600,000 of the appropriations that have been made for States. Mobile, which in 1884 paid at its custom-house $52,000 of revenue all told, has in this bill an appropriation of $120,000 for the improvement of its harbor. There has been already expended upon that valuable commercial mart $558,000, and the estimate for the completion of the harbor is a million and a half—more than $2,000,000 to improve the great harbor of Mobile where $52,000 of revenue are annually collected. Why, if gentlemen will stop to think, they will find that it would take forty years of all the collections made at that port to pay for the improvement of the harbor, to say nothing about repairs. It is the improvement of a harbor 23½ miles long, and it requires nearly $100,000 each year to keep it in its ordinary condition, merely to make it passable for vessels drawing 17 feet of water. In other words, you would have to have another Mobile harbor just like the present one in order to pay the expenses of keeping one of them in repair, even if you appropriated the total of the collections of revenue from both.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I desire to ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] if he knows whether the revenue is any indication of the amount of the commerce. The internal commerce and the coastwise commerce are much more important at some ports than the foreign imports.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have said nothing about that. I have simply spoken of the revenues collected at that port as furnishing at least some indication of the importance of the port to the general commerce of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that a barbor can be made at Mobile; but what is the use of our expending these vast sums where there is no commerce or prospect of commerce? Why attempt to force commerce through these extraordinary expenditures to places apparently not intended by nature for commercial purposes? If it was practicable within reasonable limits to give Mobile a harbor, I would be glad that it might be done.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] permit one question—and he knows well the locality to which it applies? He speaks of nature not having provided for this harbor of Mobile. My question is, What would be the condition of Chicago and its commerce to-day if there had been nothing done there to make a harbor and the port had been left to depend upon the old slough?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has done me too much honor. He has attributed to my ability and industry on the Committee of Rivers and Harbors the result of obtaining some $600,000 for the State that I have the honor in part to represent. Now, sir, the appropriations I have obtained for the rivers and the only harbor in that State amount to $275,000 instead of $600,000. I only wish the amount were $600,000. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], in making his estimate, may have included the appropriation for the Muscle Shoals; but that, sir, is not for Alabama. The Muscle Shoals are located in Alabama, it is true, but that is an obstruction of the great Tennessee River; and when the improvement there is completed it will open up a navigation of 1,000 miles in extent. But it is an improvement that is put down in the Book of Estimates and in the report of the engineers as a Tennessee improvement and not at all an Alabama improvement. The gentleman from Iowa may have included the Chattahoochee River in his calculation as an Alabama river. It happens to flow between Alabama and Georgia, but it flows out of Georgia into Florida, and is not an Alabama improvement at all. So with the Choctawhatchee River and the Conecuh-Escambia River, which are Florida rivers. And, sir, the gentleman, in order to make up the $600,000, may charge against Alabama the Coosa River, which in this bill receives $60,000.

Why, sir, that is a Georgia river, and is so put down in the Book of Estimates and in the report of the engineers. The State of Alabama receives only $275,000 for improvements that are legitimately Alabamian.

The gentleman has made an assault upon Mobile. He either displays great ignorance of this place or has some design in belittling it. Why, sir, that is a city of 40,000 inhabitants. It has a bay 15 miles wide and 26 miles long, the most beautiful bay on this continent, the most lovely this side of the Bay of Naples. The work proposed and contemplated there is to cut a channel through that length of 26 miles. The engineers make estimates and specifications for getting a channel 26 miles long, 200 feet wide, and 17 feet deep.

And I may say that channel is nearly completed. Is it asking too much of the Government that this work shall be done? Some 300,000 bales of cotton now pass out there annually. When I say that this cotton is worth $50 a bale the gentleman, though not very good at calculations, can work out the sum. He will find that it reaches millions of dollars. The lumber that goes out of that port amounts also to millions. Before this improvement was made we had only 9 feet of water there; and this lumber and this cotton had to be lightered down to the vessels in the lower bay. We have now 17 feet of water.

I wish to say a word about the alleged discriminations in this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we shall now have a vote on the amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SPOONER, it was rejected.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to amend by striking out the last word of this clause. I think that a portion of the remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa are worthy of a reply, because this is the third or fourth time that statements conveying the same idea have been repeated in this House. I think such statements contain a very unfair reflection upon members of the committee, and must spring perhaps from an obscurity in the gentleman's mind as to the real cause of the alleged disparity between these different appropriations.

I understood the gentleman to insinuate, or rather to charge, that the members of the committee have been more liberal toward the States which they represent than toward others. Now, the gentleman ignores the fact that there enters into this matter the question of the original constitution of that committee; and I think he will agree with me that he has the cart before the horse, because it is customary, I understand, to select for any committee men who are especially familiar with the subject-matter referred to the committee, or men whose constituents are especially identified in interest with that subject. Therefore the members of this committee have been selected from the great States of the Mississippi Valley. They were selected from the States having harbors and rivers which required the largest degree of attention. Therefore it follows naturally that upon the merits of the propositions a large part of the appropriations should fall to these particular States.

The residue of the gentleman's remarks simply take issue, as I understand, with the United States engineers, who have in every case recommended a very much larger appropriation for these specific enterprises than has been granted.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in the course of the general debate on this bill took occasion to direct a portion of his remarks against the State of Michigan, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, as being one of the States unduly appropriated for in this bill. I read his language:

> Look at Michigan! She has been well represented in the committee, magnificently in the bill. I doubt whether there is an inlet to the land from the surrounding lakes which has not a place in this bill. They are all named without regard to the unpronounceable character of their names.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Do you deny that? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts in regard to Michigan? It happens, and it may be our misfortune, that the State of Michigan has more coast line than any other State in this entire Union; I think I might say almost double the coast line of any other State—a coast of nearly 1,600 miles, including the head of Lake Erie, the Detroit River, Lake Saint Clair, the Saint Clair River, the entire coast of Lake Huron and Saginaw Bay, the entire southern coast of Lake Superior, the entire southern and eastern coast of Lake Michigan, and a good portion of the western and all the northern coast of that lake.

But for what objects are these appropriations made? To begin with, there is the appropriation of $250,000 (the only very large appropriation for Michigan) for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal—a canal which last year carried a commerce amounting to 3,200,000 tons—a commerce that is increasing at an enormous and constantly accelerating ratio. Included in this commerce during the last season, according to the report of the engineer having charge of the canal—General O. M. Poe—there were 15,695,194 bushels of wheat and 1,440,093 barrels of flour, which came largely from Minnesota, from Dakota, and from Northern Iowa, the State which the gentleman himself represents. Next comes the Hay Lake channel in the Saint Mary's River, another great interstate and international thoroughfare, through which all the vast commerce from Lake Superior finds its way to the seaboard. For this, $150,000 is appropriated. Next is the Sand Beach harbor of refuge upon Lake Huron—a harbor constructed expressly and solely for the benefit of the general commerce of the lake. This receives $100,000. Next, as we pass down, we come to the appropriations for the Saint Clair Flats Canal, another of the great highways of commerce, through which all the commerce of the upper lakes—Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, Lake Huron—grain, ores, lumber, coal, &c., from the great West pass to market.

Then after the Saint Clair Flats Canal comes the Lime Kiln Crossing in the Detroit River, that magnificent river which has no equal on the continent, which bears on its bosom the mighty commerce of an empire in wealth and in extent; and yet in that river was a ledge of rocks at Lime Kiln Crossing making it impossible for vessels of great tonnage to pass, and this appropriation of $50,000 is to remove the remainder of that ledge of rocks. Thus we have $575,000 of total appropriation for the State of Michigan of no local character, but as national in its application and benefits as the improvement of New York Harbor or the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi.

In addition to these strictly national objects are two appropriations for harbors of refuge which are not at all local in their character, but designed for the benefit of the general commerce of the two upper lakes—Superior and Michigan. These are the harbors of refuge at Grand Marais, on the south shore of Lake Superior, and Ludington, near Great Point au Sable, the most dangerous point on Lake Michigan.

When these appropriations are deducted there remains but a trifling sum for Michigan's enormous coast line, which would girdle the great State of Iowa.

Lake Erie gets one petty appropriation of $3,000. Lake Huron, with hundreds of miles of stormy coast, gets one small local appropriation. Superior, that "great unsalted sea" of the North, gets two small allowances for Marquette and Ontonagon, while Lake Michigan and Green Bay, with fully 500 miles of coast, aside from its harbors of refuge, gets scarcely $100,000.

If other States are as free from objectionable appropriations in this bill as Michigan is, I can conscientiously testify that it is a bill that will bear most searching scrutiny.

If the committee has erred, it has been in my judgment in the direction of economy and not of extravagance.

For instance, the engineers recommended $150,000 for completing the harbor of refuge at Portage Lake, between Points au Sable and aux Becs Scies. This bill grants but $15,000, only 10 per cent. The engineer recommends $50,000 for Manistee, one of the great commercial ports of Lake Michigan, a port whose entrances and clearances last season aggreated thirty-five hundred and seventy-two, and whose commerce amounted to many millions of dollars, and yet the committee has allowed but $10,000—barely enough to keep the harbor from deteriorating.

These harbors on Lake Michigan are the outlets through which Michigan sends to the world her magnificent product of iron, lumber, and salt.

I hear talk in this House of cheapening salt and lumber to the consumer by repealing the duty and putting them on the free-list and opening our already overstocked labor markets to the untrammeled competition of Canadian woods and mills and salt-works. It is a delusion, and would prove a snare.

But if you want to cheapen salt and lumber to the consumer you can do it by completing our harbors, reducing the obstacles and perils of navigation, creating cheaper freights, and thus while protecting labor from overcompetition and affording relief by the construction of the works you will bring cheaper iron, cheaper lumber, and cheaper salt to every consumer in the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Before making the motion to rise, I ask respectfully of the friends of the bill, as far as they can—and I know it is a hard request to comply with, in view of the number of items and the vast opportunity for debate afforded—they will limit themselves on points of explanation in order to get on with the bill. There are plenty of things the committee could answer which they do not answer. What I have said has proceeded from the kindest spirit and only in the hope of making progress with the bill. I now move the committee rise.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I shall take the liberty of completing my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIS. I had no reference to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This is the third river and harbor bill, and I have not taken up five minutes in debate upon them heretofore.

Mr. WILLIS'S motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH moved, by unanimous consent, that the bankrupt bill and report be reprinted, as the number heretofore printed was exhausted.

The motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. KING (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of February 8, 1886, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office furnishing information relative to land-grant wagon-roads in the State of Oregon; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed, and referred, with the accompanying papers without printing, to the Committee on Public Lands, if there be no objection.

Mr. DOLPH. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior is a mere formal letter, transmitting the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I suggest that probably it would not be worth while to print that, but that the whole be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and if it should be found necessary to have the accompanying papers printed a motion can be reported back to the Senate for that purpose. The committee in making a report upon the general question as to what shall be done with these grants may conclude to embody part of this communication in their report, and it may be printed in that manner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order to print will be withheld, although it is the courtesy and custom to print all executive communications. Still, if there be no objection, the order to print will be withheld in this case.

Mr. DOLPH. I will merely say that there is no intentional discourtesy in my suggestion at all. The report is accompanied by some maps, and it may not only be quite expensive to print them, but cause a long delay before we can get it in a printed form. As I am desirous of securing early action on the part of the Committee on Public Lands on this question, my object in having it referred without printing is to get the information before the committee at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to the requirements of the act of July 22, 1854, a supplemental report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the alleged private land claim designated as Canada de Cochiti; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to the act of July 22, 1854, a supplemental report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the alleged private land claim designated as Salvador Gonzales, No. 82; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the secretary of Wyoming Territory, forwarding, as required by section 1844 of the Revised Statutes, two copies of the laws enacted by the Ninth Legislative Assembly of that Territory; which, on motion of Mr. PLATT, was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia (Pa.) Maritime Exchange, remonstrating against the passage of the bill giving American registers to the ten foreign steamers of the International Navigation Company; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Philadelphia (Pa.) Maritime Exchange, urging the abrogation of the Hawaiian reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAMERON presentcd petitions of Granges No. 569, No. 650, No. 368, No. 506, and No. 551, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented memorials of Granges No. 569, No. 650, No. 368, and No. 551, Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the admission of all agricultural raw materials free of duty; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of citizens of Idaho, praying for the annexation of Northern Idaho to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. TELLER. I present a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, setting forth the evils arising "from the sweeping exercise of the absolute veto power of the governor, by which much needed legislation, including the general appropriation bill, has been defeated," and asking that this prerogative of the executive of the Territory be withdrawn and measures adopted for immediate relief. I think from examination of this memorial it should go to the Committee on Territories, because the legislation which it urges would properly come from that committee.

I also present certain papers, being copies of bills passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Utah at its session commencing the 11th day of January, 1886, which were vetoed or failed to be acted upon by the governor, to accompany the memorial which I have just submitted. I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD. I do not care about its being read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the memorial will be inserted in the RECORD, and it will be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Territories.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to Congress.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: We, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, respectfully represent that, having been elected by the citizens of this Territory, duly qualified as voters under the provisions of the act of Congress known as the Edmunds law, we have met and labored diligently during the term of sixty days required by law, and have passed such measures as were necessary to the welfare of our constituents and to comply with the requirements of section 9 of the Edmunds act. But in the discharge of our duties we have met with persistent obstruction from the governor, who, exercising arbitrary and extraordinary powers, has nullified the chief labors of the session and has thrown the affairs of the Territory into perplexing confusion. We therefore memorialize your honorable body, and earnestly ask your attention to the following facts and grievances:

It has been well understood from the opening of the present Legislature that a deep-laid conspiracy has been formed for the purpose of effecting a revolution in Utah, by which the entire control of the Territory should be wrested from the large majority of its citizens and placed in the hands of a small minority, who have for a long time by misrepresentations and falsehoods sought to prejudice the Government and people of the United States against Utah and its people.

Unable by reason of numerical insignificance to wield any influence of importance at the polls, this conspiring minority have planned to obtain the entire disfranchisement of the majority, or the concentration of political power in a commission of their own number, so that in either event the few shall rule while the vast majority shall be placed in the position of subjugated slaves.

At the head and front of this conspiracy stands Eli H. Murray, governor of Utah, who has openly advocated the disruption of the Territory by depriving its citizens of every vestige of local self-government, and who has from the commencement of his administration allied himself to the plotters against the peace of the people, and has persistently abused and insulted and maligned the majority in private, in public documents, and through the medium of the press.

By the most atrocious falsehoods, by attempted usurpations, by insolent messages, he has sought to provoke a conflict between the people and the Federal authority, which he claims to represent, and between the legislative and executive branches of the local government.

During the present session he has vetoed twenty bills sent to him for signature, and thirteen bills he has contemptuously ignored. The excuses offered, where any have been given, have been in most instances of the flimsiest character, and in no case have contained vital objections or reasons that raised a pertinent issue. Every one of those measures would have been beneficial to the whole people of Utah, and, while framed in response to the wishes of our constituents, were in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the United States. Among the most important of those measures were bills for the following purposes:

To allow bail as a right in cases of appeal from the lower courts to the higher, except in capital offenses; to provide for an increased jury list and the payment of jurors; to regulate the legislative apportionment of the Territory for the support of the Deseret University; creating a Territorial board for the equalization of taxes, for the support of the Territorial insane asylum; prescribing the qualifications of electors and office-holders; appropriating funds for Territorial expenses, &c. The bill allowing bail was necessary to the ends of justice, for it is a farce to grant the right of appeal and then inflict the punishment appealed from while the appeal is pending. The bill increasing the jury list was required, because the Poland law provides for only two hundred jurors for each year, and these have been found insufficient, necessitating a resort to the open venire system, which has been so shamefully abused that juries have been packed with persons chosen intentionally from the enemies of defendants. The bill followed strictly and exactly the provisions of the Poland law in the manner of selecting the jurors, but increased the number so as to meet every possible requirement without recourse to the open venire. It also provided for the payment of jurors and witnesses, and the veto not only continues the system by which juries may be packed, but deprives jurors, who are compelled to serve, of any pay for their services for the ensuing two years. The bill apportioning the legislative representation of the Territory was framed in accordance with the following recommendation of the governor:

"I recommend that the districts be so constructed that each shall have a voice without being overborne by a larger neighbor which may be combined with it as now." At the last session of the Legislature he vetoed a bill drawn up at his suggestion, but stated that if the Legislature would pass an act apportioning the Territory into twelve council districts and twenty-four representative districts on the basis of one councilor to every 12,000 and one representative to every 6,000 of population, he would be pleased to approve it. The bill was passed exactly in the form proposed, but he neither signed nor approved it nor mentioned it further, so it died a natural death. The bill we have passed is strictly in conformity with his expressed wishes, but he has refused to append his signature. The bill for the support of the Deseret University is essential to the welfare of the only college sustained by Territorial funds. It appropriated for the gratuitous tuition of normal students the sum of $10,000 per annum instead of $5,000, which has been the annual amount, but which is now insufficient to the growing educational needs of the Territory and the rapid growth of the institution.

The bill creating a Territorial board of equalization was passed at his suggestion and is a needed measure to secure equal taxation in the several counties. The bill for the support of the Territorial insane asylum is a public necessity, not only to maintain a praiseworthy establishment but to pay liabilities contracted at the governor's instance as one of its directors; no provision now exists by which the unfortunates cared for in the asylum may be maintained. The bill prescribing the qualifications of electors and office-holders was framed in pursuance of the following clause of section 9 of the Edmunds act, to wit:

"And at or after the first meeting of said Legislative Assembly, whose members shall have been selected and returned according to the provisions of this act, said Legislative Assembly may make such laws conformable to the organic act of said Territory and not inconsistent with other laws of the United States, as it shall deem proper concerning the filling of the offices in said Territory declared vacant by this act."

The Legislature of 1884 passed an election law, as authorized by the foregoing, but it was vetoed by the governor, who specified a number of very trifling reasons for rejecting it. We framed a bill upon the groundwork of the former measure but avoiding the points objectionable to the governor as presented in his former veto message. He has peremptorily refused to sign it. The only reason that we know of for this refusal is the desire to continue in office the five commissioners appointed under the Edmunds law to select proper persons to fill the registration and election offices in the Territory. The design of the Edmunds law, as indicated in section 9, was to have those offices filled as the Legislature should provide, and thus abolish the commission. It was only designed to be temporary. As soon as a Legislature elected under the provisions of the Edmunds law should meet and provide for the filling of those offices the object of appointing the commission would be accomplished. And the specific purpose of their appointment and of the election of a Legislative Assembly under their auspices was to prevent bigamists, polygamists, and persons practicing unlawful cohabitation from voting or holding office in Utah. This was secured by the election bill that the governor has vetoed, which provides for the registration of voters and imposes the following oath upon all applicants for registration:

TERRITORY OF UTAH,
County of ——, ss:

I, —— ——, being first duly sworn (or affirmed) depose and say, that I am over twenty-one years of age, and have resided in the Territory of Utah for six months, and in the precinct of —— one month immediately preceding the date hereof, and I am a native born or naturalized (as the case may be) citizen of the United States, and a tax-payer in the Territory; and I do further swear (or affirm) that I am not a bigamist or a polygamist, and I do not cohabit with more than one woman.

—— ——.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 188-.

—— ——.

Registration officer for —— precinct.

Or if a female the following oath or affirmation:

TERRITORY OF UTAH,
County of ——, ss:

I, —— ——, being first duly sworn (or affirmed) depose and say, that I am over twenty-one years of age, and have resided in the Territory of Utah for six months, and in the precinct of —— one month immediately preceding the date hereof, and am a native born or naturalized, or the wife, widow, or daughter (as the case may be) of a native born or naturalized citizen of the United States; I do further solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am not cohabiting with a bigamist, polygamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, 188-.

Registration officer for —— precinct.

This is the same oath formulated by the commissioners and taken by all persons who voted at the election which returned us to office. The commissioners had no authority in law to impose any oath whatever. Their act in doing so was legislation. While they remain in office that oath is imposed without authority of law. But by the bill which the governor has vetoed the oath would become legal and the object of the Edmunds law in its political portion would be fully accomplished. The veto of that bill nullifies one of the purposes of the Edmunds act, and continues in office a useless commission costing the Government an average of $50,000 per annum, not including the $25,000 per annum for their salaries or the large amount for their personal expenses. This Territory under the bill we passed could attend to its own election business at a cost of not more than $5,000, which would be paid out of its own treasury. The veto of that bill then costs the United States Treasury about $75,000 per annum unnecessarily and without any good result.

The appropriation bill was closely economical and provided the necessary funds for the local government, for educational purposes, for the improvement of roads and bridges, for the fees of jurors and witnesses and other expenses of the courts, and to meet obligations lawfully contracted. But it created no public debt, fostered no private scheme, and kept within the limits of the current revenue. The reason assigned for vetoing this bill, which was absolutely necessary for the conduct of public affairs, is that the officers to handle the funds are not de jure officers, because they are not appointees of the governor. For twenty-six years the Territorial auditor and treasurer were elected by the Legislative Assembly in joint session. The law was then changed, making them elective by the people. The bill rendering the offices elective was signed by Governor Murray's predecessor, and was not disapproved by Congress. The present incumbents were duly elected and qualified, and hold their commissions from Governor Murray himself. But the governor contends that he has the right to nominate these officers, to be confirmed by the council of the Legislative Assembly. And because this right is disputed by the council who have not confirmed his nominees—persons obnoxious to the great majority of the citizens—he has refused to sign the appropriation bill, and has thus cut off the motive power which turns the wheels of the Territorial machinery, stopping all public improvements and demoralizing business generally. In the face of this law standing upon our statute books, the council could not accept the dictum of the executive, who is not endowed with judicial powers. In declaring the law invalid which provides for the election of the auditor and treasurer, he has assumed judicial functions; and in vetoing the appropriation bill on the pretext that those officers were elected under an invalid law, he has acted the part of a tyrant and an obstructionist, placing a barrier in the way of all Territorial advancement. Even if the governor's view of the law is correct and our predecessors for thirty-four years have been mistaken—and this can only be properly decided by a competent court—that does not justify an executive in destroying the combined labors of both houses of the Legislature. As well might the President of the United States refuse to sign all the appropriation bills of Congress because the Senate refused to confirm his nominees to office.

The power of absolute veto which is vested in the governor of Utah is the principal evil that suggests and makes possible the obstruction of the executive. It stands as an anomaly and a solecism in this great Republic. It is a menace to freedom and a relic of monarchical absolutism. In every State and Territory of the Federal Union except Utah a two-thirds majority vote of the Legislature will pass any duly enacted bill over the governor's veto. Even Arizona, once suffering under the same disability as Utah, was, July 19, 1876, freed from this unjust and needless despotism. If the one man who wields this extraordinary power were of the people, or a friend to the people, whose expressed will at the polls he can annul by a stroke of the pen, or by dogged refusal to sign his name, it would not be so thoroughly oppressive. But he is usually not identified with the people nor with their interests, but is arbitrarily appointed, by those in whose authority the people affected have no voice or vote, from a distant place and with aims and purposes foreign to theirs. Thus one man who is unfriendly, in this case strongly antagonistic to the masses, can render null and void by simply acting as an obstructionist the entire labors for sixty days of thirty-six legislators elected at the polls by nearly all the voting citizens of the most populous Territory of the Union.

Measures are pending in your honorable body to deprive of the elective franchise the industrious, peace-loving, thrifty, and self-supporting citizens of Utah who are free from all the disabilities of the Edmunds act, and can not be convicted of crime, essential or constituted by law. In some matters of belief they differ from other citizens. Is this an offense which should render them voteless in a land of religious liberty? The Supreme Court of the United States has enunciated the doctrine that governments can only legislate against actions; that matters of faith, and opinion, and worship are beyond their control, and that it is time for them to interfere when beliefs break out into overt acts against peace and good order. Your honorable body is urged to pass laws in violation of this principle and of the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The only results that can be expected from such a revolution in the affairs of this Territory are the complete control of the many by the conspiring few—85 per cent. of the population dominated by the other 15 per cent.; seven-tenths of the voting citizens deprived of the ballot to please and enrich the remaining three-tenths, the latter now holding all the offices in the Federal gift, and plotting and conspiring to grasp all the local offices and the local finances. It is an error to suppose that this will tend to solve the religious problem peculiar to this Territory. It will but confirm the faith of those who adhere to tenets which they will deem assailed by unfair and unprecedented weapons, and render more solid and compact the ranks of the people so unjustly despoiled.

Disfranchisement for unorthodox belief or for membership in an unpopular church will be something entirely new under the Government of the United States, and a stride backward toward the cruel intolerance and religious bondage of mediæval times. Its proposal is not in the interest of the nation, but of a few adventurers who lust for place, power, and pelf, and are taking advantage of common prejudice against a misunderstood community to effect their nefarious personal ends. Through the toils, privations, and daring of the pioneers of this people the whole Rocky Mountain region has been opened to civilization and the extension of the power and increase of the wealth of this great Republic. Shall the sons and daughters of those brave and loyal pioneers, many of whom aided in wresting this vast section on the Pacific Slope from the dominion of Mexico, now be rewarded by total disfranchisement and by subjugation to a handful of adventurers who have come here to take advantage of their labors and sacrifices?

We respectfully ask that the bills which we have named, copies of which are herewith forwarded, may receive the authority of law, either by enactment of Congress or by other means deemed suitable by your honorable body. We would urge this especially in regard to the election, jury, and appropriation bills, which are absolutely essential to the welfare of the Territory.

That the veto power of the executive in this Territory of nearly two hundred thousand people be made conformable to that in every other section of this great Republic, so that a two-thirds majority vote of the Legislature may prevail over a single voice, and that an arbitrary, irksome, and anomalous one-man power shall no longer be absolute in opposition to the expressed wishes of the people who suffer from this more than monarchical authority.

That the conspiracy to revolutionize the Territory and reverse the rule that majorities shall govern may not prevail, but that your honorable body will view this matter in the light of justice and an understanding of the facts, postponing action until full inquiry into both sides of the question shall enable intelligence and calm judgment to take the place of prejudice and the unseemly haste that is born of it.

That the cumbersome, useless, and expensive Utah Commission, which has fully served the purpose for which it was created and which has in addition exercised both legislative and judicial functions without the slightest authority in law, be at once abolished and the voting citizens be permitted to regulate their own election affairs, at their own expense, under the laws of Congress and of the Territory.

That a commission of disinterested persons be appointed to quietly and fully investigate the affairs of this Territory, so that accurate information may be obtained concerning the people, their condition, progress, sentiments, prospects, and attitude toward the General Government, with a view to determine their qualifications for the responsibilities and duties of self-government under the liberal constitution which they have framed and to which they invite the careful scrutiny of your honorable body.

And that, in the event of Statehood being still further postponed, the people of the oldest, wealthiest, most populous, and most progressive Territory of the United States be relieved of the incumbrances and hindrances with which special legislation has weighted them down, and that the citizens who have broken no law may be permitted, like those of other Territories, to legislate for themselves and to demonstrate their good qualities, their ability to regulate their local affairs, and their fitness for their high destiny as a vigorous Commonwealth which shall prove a strength and support to the Federal Union.

Let not our prayers be disregarded. We ask no special favor. We only appeal for fair treatment, for equal rights with other citizens, for common liberties, for simple justice. And while the God of nations will approve your fearless action in support of reason and of right in opposition to abuse and wrong, a grand and united people, redeemed from oppression, will vindicate your good judgment and glorify your patriotism.

And your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 609) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry S. French, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1117) for the relief of Emanuel Mason, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PIKE. A statement from the clerk of the Court of Claims of a judgment rendered in that court was sent to the Committee on Claims by mistake. The committee asks to be relieved from its consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1962) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 14) authorizing the appointment and retirement of Samuel Kramer as a chaplain in the Navy of the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1390) for the relief of B. Frank Patterson, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2204) to provide for the repairing and improvement of the old custom-house and post-office building in Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2205) for the relief of T. L. Owens, administrator de bonis non, with the will annexed, of the estate of T. G. Owens, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2207) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2208) to amend and enlarge the fifth section of an act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th of July, 1868;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2211) granting a pension to Julia A. Rhoads; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2212) granting a pension to Christiana Tichenor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2213) for the relief of John Ellis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER introduced a bill (S. 2214) to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the section of the Revised Statutes referred to in the title of the bill is the one which prohibits the enlistment of soldiers of the late confederate army in the Army of the United States. I have marked on the bill "for reference to the Judiciary Committee." If in the opinion of the Chair the appropriate committee is the Committee on Military Affairs I shall make no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2215) granting a pension to Mary G. Todd, widow of the late Dr. R. N. Todd, of Indianapolis, Ind.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 2221) for the relief of chaplains in the Army of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EUSTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROADS IN HANDS OF COURT RECEIVERS.

Mr. CALL. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire whether any legislation is needed, and, if so, what, to require the courts of the United States when they take possession of the railroad property of corporations in the several States to carry into effect the obligations of the charter of incorporation granted by such States and to prevent violations of the same by such courts or the officers thereof, and the waste and wrongful appropriations of the assets and receipts of such corporations in the interest of individuals; and to report by bill or otherwise.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, on the 7th of April, when a resolution which I had the honor to introduce on the forfeiture of railroad land grants was under consideration, I used the following language:

I call the attention of the Judiciary Committee to this foul wrong, by which a judge of the United States court, without proof or knowledge of the facts, without contest, upon an application made by certain parties professing to hold securities without investigation of how those securities were issued, what consideration was given for them, without any controversy whatever, appoints a receiver and imports him from another State, irresponsible to the people of the State, suspending the charter contract between the State and the parties holding the franchise, coming into the court and asking of the court to take possession of the public lands of the United States for an insolvent corporation under a grant which expired twenty years ago.

I observe in a Florida paper the following:

Judge Settle granted permission to-day to H. R. Duval, receiver of the court in the case of W. B. Cutting et al. vs. The Florida Railway and Navigation Company, to change the gauge of railroads of which he is receiver to correspond with the standard gauge of 4 feet 9 inches at such time as he may direct.

The claim of R. Fulton Cutting against the Florida Railway and Navigation Company, amounting to $141,937.27, was referred to J. H. Durkee, master, to inquire into the duty of the defendant property to pay the same and the propriety of the court instructing the receiver to make such payment, and report to the court.

The same order was made in the matter of the taxes in arrears assessed against the property of the railroad company for the years prior to 1882 and due for 1885.

In the same speech I read and printed as an appendix a record of the United States circuit court at Jacksonville, Fla., which exhibited the fact that the lands of the grant had been encumbered with a mortgage for the $140,000 which is here proposed to be paid by this company. I read the following statement:

Mr. Wailes states as follows in the bill of complaint, to which he has made oath, in the cause now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Florida:

"Your orator avers that, disregarding the premises and the rights of your orator hereinbefore stated, the said company recently, to wit, on or about the 9th day of June, A. D. 1885, obtained a loan of about $140,000, and secured the payment of the same by encumbering or conveying about 85,000 acres of its most valuable lands situate south of Panasoffkee aforesaid, by executing to defendant, J. A. Johnson, trustee, an instrument in writing, of which a copy is hereto annexed or filed herewith marked Exhibit E, and which your orator prays may be taken as a part of this bill, and applied said moneys, to wit, said $140,000, to the payment of several years of arrears of taxes due the State of Florida and assessed upon its constructed road and property appurtenant thereto, not including, however, the said 85,000 acres of land."

That this road after twenty years should be taken possession of by the court, stopped in its course of construction, and its proceeds and earnings applied to make the road a broad-gauge and of a different standard after being built with the lands of the United States, without any payment of the subscription of the stockholders, making it a mere plaything for parties without any substantial and lawful interest, is a matter I think that requires the attention and consideration of the Judiciary Committee; and some legislation should be devised by which the people of the State may be protected and recognized in the courts, and by which the charter contract may be enforced and carried into effect, and the road completed to Tampa. It is time that this matter should receive a full and fair investigation by the proper committees of Congress. The facts as stated in these records are of an extraordinary character, and the proceedings had are of a nature under the circumstances which demand a careful consideration.

I desire to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate, in order that the people may have some rights and some protection in the courts of the United States, and that they shall be required to take judicial notice of the obligation of State laws in connection with corporate interests, and that suits which have no just foundation, which are not predicated upon substantial interests, may not be allowed without investigation and proof to take possession of these large properties and suspend their construction to the point required by the charter obligation, encumber them with a great indebtedness, and expend it for purposes other than its completion to the terminal point required by its charter.

As a matter of personal privilege I think it my duty to bring before the Senate a telegram which I have just received.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida whether he expects to consume much time. If so, I feel under the necessity of objecting to the consideration of the resolution to-day. I desire to ask the Senate to go on with the private pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I do not think the Senator will have a right to interpose an objection at this stage, as the Senate agreed by unanimous consent to consider the resolution. However, I do not propose to occupy five minutes more.

I stated in the course of the remarks which I made on the 7th of April that a letter was in my hands from Dr. Stringer, a highly respectable citizen of Brooksville, Fla., stating that the persons circulating the petition for confirmation of the grant said that the receiver threatened to take up the iron from the road unless the people petitioned Congress to confirm the entire grant. The statement I made was as follows:

Not content with this $5,500,000 of securities held by them on a property built by the State and the United States with public lands, and the proceeds of their sales, under a contract with the State for its completion in eight years and with the United States in ten years, this grant of 576,000 acres, with the homes of settlers, is claimed, and it is stated in a letter of Dr. Stringer, a highly respectable gentleman of Brooksville, that the persons circulating the petition for confirmation of the grant stated that the receiver threatens to take up the iron from the road unless the people petition Congress to confirm this expired grant. What a commentary do these facts make on the administration, not of law, but on the exercise of judicial power by your courts! Is it beyond the power of the Judiciary Committees of Congress, of both judges and legislators, to find some means by which a charter contract to which the people of a State and corporations are parties can have some recognition in the courts and by the judges of the United States?

I have a telegram just received from the receiver which I think it fair and just to him to read. The telegram is as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., April 21, 1886.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL:

The information upon which you charge in the Senate that the petitions adverse to forfeiture of F. R. and N. land grant are coerced by any threats of mine or any of my officers are unqualifiedly false and malicious as to myself personally and an aspersion on the thousands of signers, understood by me to be gentlemen of the highest character and leading influence in their respective localities. Will you do them and me the justice to make this statement as public as your charge was made? Please answer.

H. R. DUVAL, Receiver.

I now make his statement public as requested by Mr. Duval, the receiver, and state that I have no reason to suppose that this receiver is not an honorable man and a truthful man; but I have also a knowledge of the fact that Dr. Stringer, upon whose authority this statement was made, is equally respectable and equally honorable, and that if the fact be true that any persons have made such statements under color of authority from the United States court or its officials it is a matter which should receive the serious consideration of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and I further state that some legislation should be enacted by which bills pending before Congress should not be interfered with or sought to be interfered with by the action of parties standing in any official relation to the courts of the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. I will move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are still in order.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. GORMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to consider the subject of a celebration in 1889, at Washington, of the centennial anniversary of the formation of the Government under the Constitution of the United States, and also of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America in 1892; and to report what, if any, action by Congress is advisable in relation thereto.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit that before the adoption of the resolution it would be wise to have it referred to a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read again.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

Mr. HAWLEY. I supposed that it related to the appointment of a committee. I see that it proposes to instruct a committee of the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say——

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. It has gone over, but——

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw my objection if the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee withdraws his objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I simply desire to suggest to the author of the resolution that that class of resolutions have always gone to the Committee on the Library and not to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They seem to relate peculiarly to the domestic relations of the United States.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that some days since I introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee upon this subject, but upon conference with some of the older Senators it was suggested that in view of the fact that various bills have already been introduced, one of them looking to a celebration both in 1889 and 1892, which have been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that would be the proper committee to take the subject into consideration. It is not alone to be confined to this country, but all the South American countries are to be invited to join in the celebration.

Mr. HOAR. I do not exactly see what the celebration of the foundation of our Government and our Constitution has to do with foreign relations. There have been quite a number of similar resolutions which have always gone to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to such a reference. My only desire is to get the matter before the proper committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend by substituting "the Committee on the Library."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, it is moved to strike out the words "Foreign Relations" and insert "the Library," so as to read:

That the Committee on the Library be instructed, &c.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to that. I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I present to the Senate in the same connection a memorial setting forth the reasons for this celebration very fully; and as it is very ably drawn, and signed by a great number of prominent citizens of this city and of other sections of the Union, I ask, in view of its importance, that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order to print the memorial in the RECORD will be made, and it will be referred to the Committeee on the Library.

The memorial is as follows:

[Permanent Exposition of the Three Americas: To be located at the capital of the United States. Constitutional Centennial Celebration in 1889: By the sixteen American republics, in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the Constitution of the parent republic, the United States. World's Exposition in 1892: In honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus.]

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF PROMOTION,
Willard's Hotel, Washington, D. C., April 21, 1886.

To Congress, the press, and public:

In three years from the 4th of last March the Constitution of the United States will have completed the first century of its existence.

Six years from the 12th of next October will be the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus.

These are great historical events of national, hemispherical, and world-wide importance, which should be celebrated in a manner becoming the dignity, wealth, and grandeur of the United States, and of the three Americas. Pride, as well as self-interest, in the success and advancement of republican and American institutions, require that all Americans unite in paying tribute to these anniversaries.

Your attention is therefore respectfully invited to some suggestions in regard to the ceremonies which it seems to us would be appropriate, and to a proposed permanent exposition which should remain as a lasting monument in honor of these events. They are simply suggestions thrown out to attract other suggestions, and to stimulate discussion of a subject which is of transcendent political and practical importance to the whole western hemisphere.

To prevent any possible misunderstanding it may be well to state, at the outset, that we, who are advocating the proposed celebration and exposition at the national capital, desire that they be entirely under the auspices and control of the General Government. Both the magnitude and dignity of the project forbid its management by a private corporation.

The subject of an exposition in 1892 has already been carefully considered in several American cities besides Washington.

More than a year ago a committee of representative and progressive citizens was appointed in Saint Louis to take steps toward its acquisition for that metropolis of the Mississippi Valley. They secured the indorsement of a national convention of fair and exposition managers, and have, since then, kept the subject prominently before the press and public.

During the past four or five months Chicago, with its usual enterprise, has held several meetings to arrange for an exposition there in 1892, which movement is cordially indorsed by the press and public of that city.

During the past four months a promoting organization has been perfected in the City of Mexico, composed chiefly of members of the press, to capture the same exposition. They have already appealed to the general government of their republic, and an early and favorable response is expected.

A year ago a meeting of some two or three hundred Spaniards and Spanish Americans was held at Tammany Hall, New York city, to take preliminary steps toward a celebration in 1892 in honor of Columbus.

Recently the subject of a world's fair in New York, in honor of the centennial of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, has been discussed in that city.

Recently, also, a bill was introduced in the United States Senate providing for a constitutional centennial celebration at Washington in 1889 by the sixteen American republics, in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of the Constitution of the parent Republic—the United States.

In brief, two points are already settled by public opinion: first, that these great historic events must be duly celebrated in some American city; and, second, that the exposition proposed in their honor should be the greatest the world ever witnessed.

Now, it is evident that great world's fairs can not be successfully held in four American cities at the same time. In this connection the mind naturally turns toward Washington, the capital of the United States—the capital of the leading nation of the three Americas—the Paris of America in attractions and beauty, and a city destined to be the Berlin of America in educational advantages. It is, therefore, a city upon which all others can unite—the truly representative city of the western hemisphere.

Let us briefly consider a few of its many advantages:

It is near the great centers of population, and easily accessible both by rail and water, as may be seen by a glance at the accompanying diagram.

Within a radius of 200 miles there are 10,000,000 people who could, if ample transportation facilities were provided, reach Washington within one night.

Washington is also a favorite resort for the tourist. It is a half-way house for the annual exodus of Americans to Europe, and a stopping place on their return.

Its climate is mild in winter, and in summer it is within easy reach of the many surrounding and attractive summer resorts.

It is the center of scenes of great historic interest, such as Mount Vernon, Arlington Heights, Yorktown, and other places. These attractions and advantages may also be seen by reference to the diagram.

But more important than all these is its park, or governmental reservation, extending from the Capitol to the national observatory, and including the Potomac flats—soon to be reclaimed and beautified—containing in all about 1,000 acres. Situated, as it is, in the heart of the city, and within a few steps of Pennsylvania avenue and the principal hotels, it has a great advantage for exposition purposes over the parks of other cities located, as they frequently are, 5 or 6 miles out in the suburbs.

This park, its contents and immediate surroundings, such as Washington Monument, the National Museum, Smithsonian Institution, the Botanic Garden, the Capitol buildings facing it on the east, the Treasury Department, Executive Mansion, Department of Justice, State, War, and Navy Departments, and the Corcoran Art Gallery, facing it on the north, are an exposition in themselves—a plant which has already cost $50,000,000—a magnificient nucleus for the still grander exposition of 1889 and 1892.

Upon this park is ample room for a permanent exposition of all the nations of the three Americas.

In the center of the Smithsonian grounds could be located a grand American museum, a building which will, in 1889 and 1892, be greatly needed when Mexico, Chili, Peru, Brazil, and the other states of Central and South America join with the United States in exhibits of their antiquities, civilization, and progress.

On the White Lot could be located a State and Territorial building, with equal space for each of the forty-six States and Territories to display their respective resources. The expense of this building could, if desired, be borne by the several States and Territories.

On the grounds of the Agricultural Department could be located an American hall, a building greatly needed for national and scientific conventions, inauguration balls, international congresses, &c.

Also, on the same grounds an American art gallery, as the nucleus for rare works of art, the portraits of the Presidents and leading statesmen of the sixteen American republics, and other paintings of historic value which those governments would doubtless contribute; also the nucleus for rare collections which wealthy private citizens may desire to bequeath.

On the Smithsonian grounds could be located a patent building for working models—something greatly needed for the use of inventors and others.

On the reclaimed flats is ample room for an American zoological garden.

On the reservation surrounding the Washington Monument could be assigned space for each of the fifteen sister republics of Spanish America and the Empire of Brazil to erect a permanent building for a display of its resources and attractions. Each being small and highly artistic, like the beautiful Mexican mineral building of iron and glass at the World's Exposition at New Orleans, they would together form an appropriate surrounding for the monument without obstructing its view from the Capitol and Executive Mansion.

Or, if preferred, these foreign buildings could be located on the north, east, and west sides of the Smithsonian grounds, or on the space extending from the White Lot to the National Observatory.

On the reclaimed flats could be located the various temporary buildings which will be needed for private exhibits at the World's Fair in 1892.

The adaptability and advantages of this national park for the various purposes mentioned may readily be seen by reference to the diagram prepared to illustrate the suggested location of the exposition buildings.

But a few of the buildings need be erected by the United States, and the expense of those few would be a safe investment, for such buildings as an American museum, American hall, and American art gallery are absolutely needed by the Government, and would remain permanently as its own property.

Looking down from Capitol Hill upon the park thus improved one would witness a panorama of nations, and on the other hand the American sister nations there encamped could look up to the Washington Monument, the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, and the various other surrounding edifices of the Federal Government and see the capital of the United States in all its grandeur and glory.

It would, in effect, be a permanent congress of the three Americas, something in harmony with the spirit of the times, as is evidenced by the numerous bills recently introduced in the Senate and House providing for a temporary convention of American nations.

For the first time in the four hundred years since their discovery by Columbus the three Americas are beginning to appreciate the transcendent importance of a more intimate acquaintance with each other. Both political parties in the United States are committed to this idea in their recent national platforms, and public sentiment demands the inauguration of an hemispherical policy based upon more intimate social and commercial relations between the various sister states of all the Americas.

The business necessity for a permanent exposition of the three Americas can best be appreciated by reference to a few trade statistics.

Of our total annual manufactures, which during the census year ending 1880 were $5,369,579,191 in value, but 2 per cent. find foreign markets. This is, indeed, an astonishing state of affairs, a defect in our commercial relations with the outside world which must be remedied.

But we need not look to Europe for adequate outlets for manufactures, for it is well supplied and has a surplus of its own for export. We must rather look to the open, unsupplied, and inviting markets of Spanish and Portuguese America and the countries surrounding the Pacific Ocean.

Looking in that direction, what do we find?

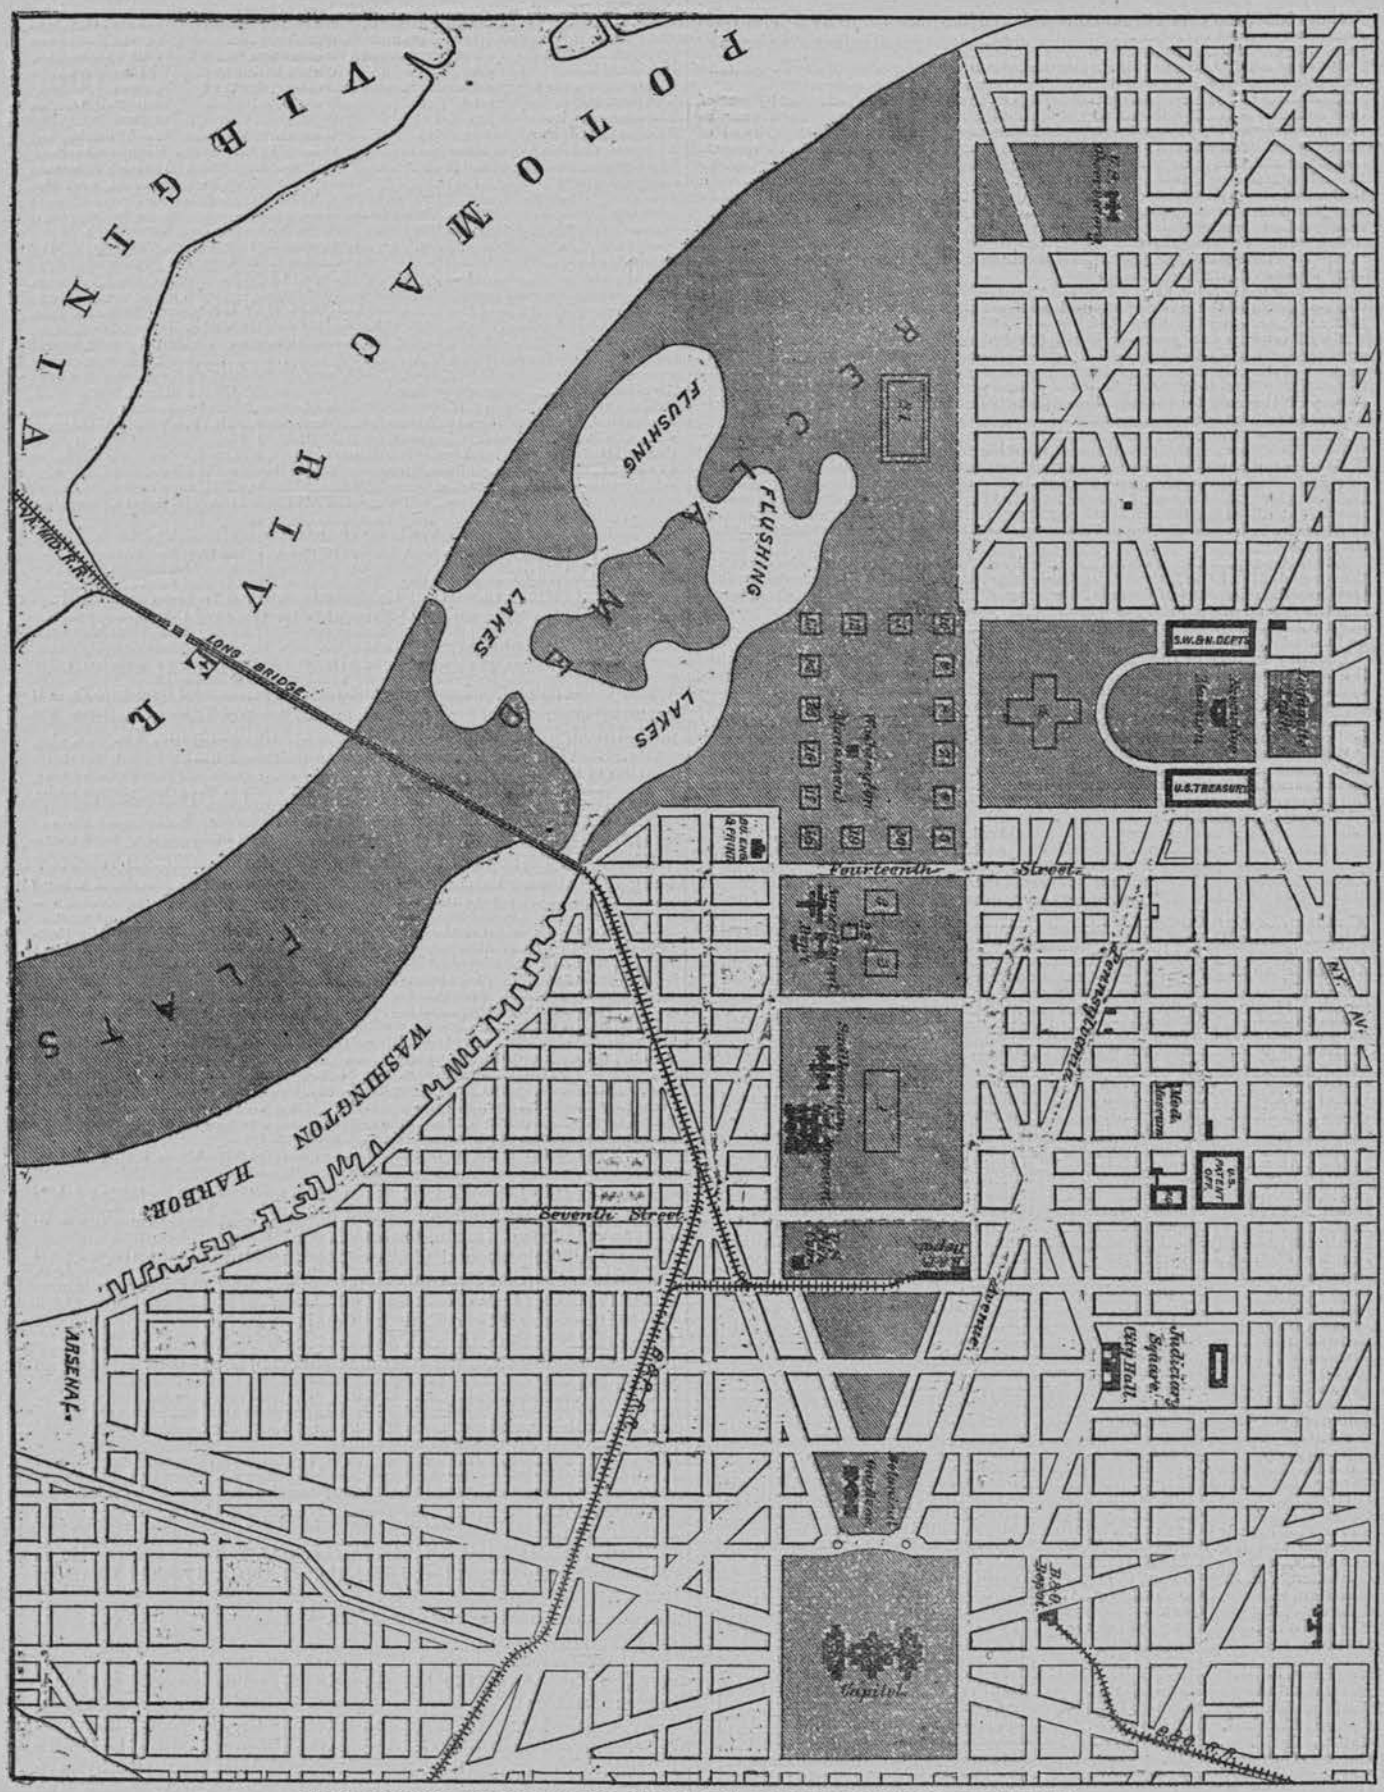
On the continent, south of the United States, are fifteen Spanish-American republics, the Portugese-American Empire of Brazil, and four European colonies.

They have a total population of 45,000,000 consumers, and an area of about 8,000,000 square miles, or more than double that of the United States.

In climate, resources, supply, and demand they are the reverse and complement of the United States. Commercial exchanges with such countries are therefore in accordance with sound laws of trade and political economy.

They are exceedingly deficient in manufactures.

They need our railway iron and supplies, farming implements, cotton and woolen goods, boots and shoes, sewing-machines, telegraph and telephone supplies, clocks and watches, notions, and a thousand and one articles of our invention and skill.



We need their coffee and sugar, tropical fruits, hard woods, fiber plants, and other raw materials.

In brief, these countries represent twenty American Indias whose unsupplied and inviting trade-fields we will find most profitable to occupy with our surplus energy, skill, products, and manufactures. At present, however, our share of that trade is disgracefully small. Their total foreign commerce, exports and imports of merchandise combined, is in value as follows:

The Republic of Mexico	$55,000,000
The five Central American republics	24,423,000
The nine South American republics	348,646,000
The four European colonies	31,950,000
The Empire of Brazil	215,061,000
Total	675,085,000

Of this total trade the United States controls but $126,822,000, or less than one-fifth part, the lion's share being monopolized by Great Britain, France, and other European powers.

Of the total annual imports of these twenty countries, which amount to $303,812,000 in value, we supply but one-seventh part.

PERMANENT EXPOSITION GROUNDS OF THE THREE AMERICAS.

1. American Museum. 2. American Art Gallery. 3. American Hall. 4. State and Territorial Building. 5. Mexico. 6. Peru. 7. Chili. 8. Argentine Republic. 9. Venezuela. 10. Brazil. 11. Bolivia. 12. Guatemala. 13. Costa Rica. 14. Nicaragua. 15. Salvador. 16. Honduras. 17. Paraguay. 18. Uruguay. 19. Ecuador. 20. United States of Colombia. 21. American Zoological Garden. 22. Statue of Columbus.

There is no better way to cure this serious defect than by inviting the several American nations together under one roof to a grand exposition of their respective resources and industries.

But new markets for surplus manufactures are only a portion of the benefits which the United States will derive from the proposed exposition.

According to a recent and elaborate report to the State Department by one of our consuls abroad, citizens of the United States alone spend each year in Europe for travel, pleasure, art, education, and similar purposes upward of $100,000,000. The Spanish-American republics and Brazil do the same thing on a smaller scale, but perhaps nearly as much in the aggregate. Why not make the art, educational, and other attractions and advantages of Washington such that a large portion of this enormous capital will be kept at home, and European travel and capital attracted here? It can be done if the permanent exposition is carried out on the scale and in the manner proposed.

The capitals of most of the prominent European nations have had world's fairs: London in 1851, Dublin in 1853, London in 1862, Paris in 1867, London in 1871, Vienna in 1873, and Paris in 1878.

It is time the capital of the United States should profit by their example in this respect, and there is no time to lose if we are to have an exposition in 1889, 1892, and permanently thereafter.

It will require one year for the necessary legislation by Congress, at least another for legislation by the forty-six States and Territories and the various nations of the other Americas, leaving but one year before the centennial of the Constitution, and four years before the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, for the erection of permanent buildings, the collection of exhibits, and other necessary work.

It is evident, therefore, we can do but little more than inaugurate the enterprise in 1889, leaving the grand consummation for 1892.

No occasion could be more appropriate for such an inauguration than the 4th of March, 1889, the one hundredth birthday of the Constitution, and the date of the inauguration of the next President of the United States, in which celebration the presidents of the fifteen American sister republics, whose organic laws are, to a greater or less extent, copied from our Constitution, should be invited to participate.

When the exposition is complete, in 1892, the President of the United States, the presidents of the fifteen American sister republics, the Emperor of Brazil, the Governor-General of Canada, the King of Italy, where Columbus was born, and the Queen of Spain, from which country he sailed, should unite in unveiling a colossal statue of the illustrious discoverer of America, which statue should be located in the center of the permanent exposition grounds at Washington.

The first century of the Republic has been mainly devoted to home affairs, the formation and perfection of constitutional government, the material development of the great interior, the adjustment of sectional disputes, and the construction of transportation routes to the seaboard.

The time has now arrived when the United States is entering upon what may be termed the international era of its existence and a broader field of action.

We therefore respectfully submit that the proposed permanent exposition of the three Americas is in accord with the spirit of the times, and that it will exert an educational, industrial, commercial, and political influence of great practical importance and value.

Very respectfully,

WM. B. WEBB, Chairman.
ALEX. D. ANDERSON, Secretary.

PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business the Calendar is in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills reported favorably by the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH BRIDESBURG ARSENAL GROUNDS.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask consent for the passage of the bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. BLAIR. If it does not lead to debate I make no objection.

Mr. CAMERON. It will not cause debate.

Mr. BLAIR. If it does not lead to debate I shall make no objection.

Mr. CAMERON. I shall not debate it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and also the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs; which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company is hereby authorized to construct its railroad across the grounds of the United States forming a part of the grounds of the arsenal at Bridesburg, in Philadelphia County, in the State of Pennsylvania; and for that purpose said company is hereby granted a width of 30 feet across said grounds for its right of way through the grounds aforesaid: Provided, That the location of said road through said grounds shall be outside of the present inclosing-wall of said arsenal on the Delaware River; and the railroad shall be provided with a draw-bridge of sufficient size on the creek, and facilities for crossing said railroad to wharves, &c., all of which shall be constructed to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the United States shall have, free of charge, the right to connect with said railroad any tracks laid within the arsenal grounds for Government uses: And provided further, That when said right of way shall cease to be used for the purpose aforesaid the same shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act is reserved to Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How long is this tract? What is its length?

Mr. CAMERON. Two hundred or 300 yards long and 30 feet wide. It is to enable the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company, a branch of the Philadelphia and Trenton road, to build a side track to reach some wharves on the Delaware River. They can not reach those wharves without passing through these grounds. A similar right was given to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the other day to build their main track. This will enable the arsenal to have two outlets for any business, one by the Pennsylvania road and the other by the Baltimore and Ohio road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the bill ought to have the same restrictions that the other had in it as to the use of this space for cars passing, without doing any other business.

Mr. CAMERON. This is outside the walls altogether and can not interfere with the Government business in any way. The other provision was with regard to the naval asylum, and not with regard to the arsenal grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to know whether the War Department, and especially the Ordnance Department, have been consulted in regard to this?

Mr. CAMERON. Not only consulted but they prepared this amended bill. The bill as read at the desk is the bill prepared by the Ordnance Department as a substitute for the original bill introduced by my colleague.

Mr. HAWLEY. I presume it is all right, but we passed a bill within a fortnight which allowed a railway track across the entire water front of the Schuylkill arsenal grounds; and now this proposes to take a slice of another arsenal in that vicinity.

Mr. CAMERON. The advantage to the arsenal is that it gives it two outlets, one by the Baltimore and Ohio and another by the Pennsylvania Railroad, and I think it is a benefit to the Government to have that advantage.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the War Department is satisfied I shall make no objection.

Mr. CAMERON. It is perfectly satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the substitute which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT LEAVENWORTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be reported.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire for a moment. I shall be obliged to be out of the Chamber after a short time, during all day probably. I wish to call up Senate bill 1352, to grant a right of way through a military reservation in the State of Kansas to a railroad, and I will state that it is important the bill should pass soon if it passes at all, because the time for the construction of the railroad is running on and the parties concerned are very anxious to go ahead with it. I am satisfied it will take but a moment.

Mr. BLAIR. I made an agreement that I would, as far as I was concerned, give way to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that I will not trespass on his courtesy this morning. I will let my matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. Is the bill of the Senator from Kansas likely to lead to debate?

Mr. PLUMB. If it does, I shall withdraw the application for its consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1352) granting the right of way to the Leavenworth, Northern and Southern Railway Company through the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. KELLEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first pension bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelley. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Benjamin F. Kelley, late a brigadier-general in the Army, at the rate of $100 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in that case be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMDEN March 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 838) for the increase of the pension of Benjamin F. Kelley, late brigadier-general, and major-general by brevet, United States Army, have had the same under consideration, and report:

It appears from the record that B. F. Kelley was commissioned colonel of the First Virginia Regiment, United States Army, May 25, 1861, and was mustered into the service.

That on August 6, 1861, he was commissioned as brigadier-general of volunteers, to rank as such from May 17, 1861; and that he resigned June 1, 1865.

At the battle of Philippi, the first fought during the war, he was severely wounded and permanently injured by a gunshot wound, fracturing the bones of the breast and shoulder and injuring his lungs. The following extracts from his military history furnish information in regard to his services:

"General B. F. Kelley, of West Virginia, raised the very first regiment of loyal troops south of Mason and Dixon's line during the late war, and was commissioned colonel of the regiment May 25, 1861, and mustered into the service of the United States.

"By order of General McClellan, then commanding the Department of the Ohio, Colonel Kelley was directed to assume command of all the loyal troops then in Virginia, and all other troops that had been ordered to report to him.

"On the 27th of May, 1861, Colonel Kelley left Wheeling with his regiment for Grafton, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, followed the next day by the Sixteenth Ohio and Ninth Indiana.

"Grafton, at that time, was held by a confederate force under command of Colonel Porterfield.

"On June 1, 1861, Kelley's forces reached Grafton and occupied the place, Colonel Porterfield having retreated to Philippi on the approach of the Union forces.

"On the afternoon of the 2d of June Kelley moved on to Philippi, marching all night through a drenching rain, and attacked the enemy at 4 o'clock on the morning of the 3d.

"The enemy was completely taken by surprise and routed; some were killed and many captured. A large amount of stores, arms, and ammunition, horses, wagons, &c., fell into the hands of the Union forces.

"Colonel Kelley, commanding, was severely, and at first thought to be mortally, wounded, having been shot, whilst making the charge, through the right breast and the upper part of the lung.

"As an evidence of the high appreciation of his conduct, attention is called to the following telegrams from Generals McClellan and Morris:

"CINCINNATI, June 3, 1861.

"To Gen. T. A. MORRIS:

"Say to Colonel Kelley that I can not yet believe it possible that one who has opened his career so brilliantly can be mortally wounded. In the name of the country I thank him for his conduct, which has been the most brilliant episode of the war thus far. If it can cheer him in his last moments, tell him I can not repair his loss, and that I only regret that I can not be by his side in person.

"God bless him.

"GEORGE B. McCLELLAN."

"GRAFTON, June 3, 1861.

"To Colonel KELLEY:

"SIR: I am extremely pleased and greatly gratified at your gallant and soldierly conduct in the expedition which owes its success to your gallant conduct. I feel that your country owes you a deep debt of gratitude for your services on the occasion, and a grateful people can not but render to you that honor you so richly deserve.

"T. A. MORRIS, Brigadier-General."

[Extract from General Morris's report.]

"I am extremely sorry to report that the gallant Colonel Kelley, of the First Virginia Regiment, while leading the attack of his column, fell severely wounded by a shot in the breast. The wound, at first supposed to be mortal, I am glad to know will only deprive us of his valuable counsels and assistance for a few weeks. Much of the success of our attack is due to him. His thorough knowledge of the country, his skill in rendering that knowledge available, his cool and unflinching courage will deprive us for the time of a great support."

[Extract from General McClellan's report.]

"Colonel Kelley, who conducted the movement on Philippi with marked ability and zeal, received a severe wound early in the action, which at the time was supposed to be mortal, but I am now happy to say he is considered out of danger."

"From the moment he received my orders at Wheeling to move on Grafton up to the time he was wounded he has exhibited in an eminent degree the qualities of an efficient commander, and I take this opportunity of renewing my recommendation for his promotion to the rank of brigadier-general."

It will be observed that General Kelley not only organized the first loyal regiment in the entire South, but that he fought and won the first victory achieved on Southern soil, in which he was severely wounded. The war record shows an unbroken series of brilliant achievements by him during the whole war.

General Kelley is now in his seventy-ninth year, and for the want of means necessary to the support of himself and family he has been forced to seek and accept a subordinate position in the Pension Office, where he is subject to all the rigid rules and exactions incident to the conduct of that department.

He is frequently disabled for duty in consequence of an almost constant cough and other effects of his wound, which necessarily involve loss of time and pay, and in the course of nature will soon be totally disabled for clerical duty.

Your committee, in view of the marked and peculiar services rendered by General Kelley, which makes his case an exceptional one—considering the fact that he raised the first Union regiment south of Mason and Dixon's line, fought the first battle, and was the first officer wounded in the war, and that after recovering he continued in the service with marked ability to the close of the war, receiving many testimonials of approbation from his commanding officers and the Government, and considering his age and necessities—your committee are of the opinion that, now in his advanced age and still suffering from the effects of his wound, he should be relieved from the necessity of daily physical labor for his support, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY HELENA MAHAN.

The bill (S. 1463) granting arrears of pension to Mary Helena Mahan, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to readjudicate the pension claim of Mary Helena Mahan, widow of Dennis H. Mahan, as if her application had been filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st of July, 1880, and to pay her a pension at the rate prescribed by law from the date of death of Dennis H. Mr. COCKRELL. I move that in lieu of that bill the Senate take up House bill 792, which has passed the House, is now pending, and is identical with this bill. I do not find it on the Calendar, but I have sent for the bill and will have it here in a minute. This bill was reported by the Senate committee just about the time the House bill got here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Perhaps this bill had better be passed over informally.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now send to the desk the bill (H. R. 792) granting a pension to David McKinney, which is the same as Senate bill 892. I presume it has not been acted upon by the Committee on Pensions, and I move that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from its further consideration, and then let it be taken up.

Mr. BLAIR. I remember the case. It is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Committee on Pensions will be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 792) granting a pension to David McKinney.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. HOAR. I would suggest that by unanimous consent, as it would save a good deal of fatigue to the Secretary, the formal parts of the bills may be omitted in the reading, and that he merely announce what the bill is. They are all bills granting pensions or arrears of pensions. Let him merely read, "Mary Merritt," "Nancy B. Leach," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That suggestion will be followed if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the suggestion.

Mr. HOAR. The suggestion merely was that the number of the bill and the order of business be stated and that it is a bill granting a pension to so-and-so, omitting all the rest. That course has been taken at former sessions.

Mr. HAWLEY. The order of business ought to be announced each time, so that we may keep on the track of the Calendar.

HEIRS OF MICHAEL O'BRIEN.

The bill (S. 1249) for the relief of the heirs of Michael O'Brien was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This seems not to be strictly a pension bill, and will be passed over.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a matter that has been before the Pension Committee at the last Congress as well as this. It is a very trifling matter, and I hardly think it is worth while, unless it be insisted upon by some one, to delay the consideration of the case. It is nothing but a land-warrant.

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. Let that bill be read again.

The bill was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR from the Committee on Pensions March 30:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1249) for the relief of the heirs of Michael O'Brien, have examined the same and report:

This bill was reported favorably by this committee during the last Congress (Senate report No. 766, Forty-eighth Congress), which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"That Michael O'Brien enlisted as a private in Company E, Second United States Infantry, January 19, 1819, and served continuously until finally discharged, by expiration of service, September 8, 1838; that he was promoted to corporal and sergeant, respectively, holding a sergeant's commission at the date of his final discharge.

"In consideration of this long and faithful service, and the fact that the heirs are in need of the relief asked for, the committee recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. COCKRELL. This is establishing an entirely new principle, and I hope the Senator will not insist upon it. It is establishing the principle of granting land-warrants to soldiers in the regular Army, which has never been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has the right to object, as the bill does not come within the understanding.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, March 30:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 3633, submit the following report:

This committee present the following extracts from the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions submitted by them on this bill:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3633) granting a pension to E. B. Sweeny, report that they have carefully considered this claim, and find that E. B. Sweeny, the claimant, enlisted for nine months in Company F, One hundred and thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and at the expiration of this term of service he returned home, and re-enlisted December 25, 1863, in the Signal Service, from which he was discharged August 22, 1865.

"Claimant alleges that in June, 1865, in the night, on the march from Winchester to Berryville, he was crushed against the pommel of his saddle; that he could scarcely retain his seat until the next morning, when the detachment returned to Winchester; that he was relieved from duty and was unable to perform any service from that time until his final discharge. He alleges great difficulty in procuring the necessary proof on account of the nature of the service in which he was engaged, the detachment being detailed for special duty, consisting frequently of six men from various organizations, with no regular surgeon to whom they could apply.

"The evidence of his father and that of companions who knew him well in his earlier days, together with that of an Army comrade, sufficiently prove that he was entirely sound when he entered the service. Of this there is no question.

"Charles F. Cross testifies that he was late chief signal officer in the United States Army; that claimant was in his command in the Shenandoah Valley, Virginia, in 1865, and that he is satisfied that claimant was injured in the discharge of his duty.

"C. R. Morehead testifies that he was a member of the signal corps and attached to Lieutenant Cross's detachment, and part of the time he tented with claimant. That he remembers he returned to camp from some detached duty disabled in such a manner as to disqualify him for duty. This was in the early summer of 1865. That the claimant was furloughed home for a time in consequence of said disability. He further states that the injury was received while in the line of duty. This is about all the evidence which the claimant, for the reasons above stated, is able to procure as to the time and manner in which his disability was received.

"Dr. D. D. Taylor affirms that he has attended claimant a number of times during the last four years for acute diseases, and that in every case there was derangement of the liver and a lack of biliary secretion. He believes that the liver and the duodenum are the parts injured; that there is induration of the right lobe of the liver, which has been the exciting cause of his acute attacks, and affiant thinks he will always be subject to these attacks.

"Dr. John C. Taylor testifies that he made an examination of the claimant; that he has an enlargement in the right lumbar region, which he testifies to be due to a partial rupture of the abdomen, and that his belief is that no surgical skill can avail in the way of cure.

"An analysis of the evidence shows (1) that claimant was undoubtedly a sound man when he entered the service, and that he remained so until the alleged injury was received near Winchester; (2) that the injury was severe at the time, and that it disabled him from further active service; (3) that the effects of the injury continued, disabling him from hard work, frequently laying him up, and requiring the attendance of a physician. He is also poor and in great need of the help which the pension asked for would afford him.

"In view of these facts your committee are of the opinion that this claim for a pension is a just one, and they therefore recommend the bill to the House for its favorable consideration."

Upon the foregoing statement of facts, and from a careful examination of papers, the committee are of the opinion that this bill should pass, and therefore recommend the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR from the Committee on Pensions on April 7:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1204) for the relief of the children of the late Surg. Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions, have examined the same and report:

The four children named in this bill are the minor children of Alfred M. Owen, late a surgeon in the United States Navy. They were pensioned by the Department from August 23, 1883, at the rate of $25 per month, which sum is divided among them at the rate allowed by the general law for officers of this grade; and an additional sum of $2 per month for each child until they arrive at the age of sixteen years.

A careful examination of the evidence in this case shows that the life of Surgeon Owen was sacrificed, not only to his own extraordinary devotion to duty, but that apparently there was no good reason why he should have been subjected to such risk and exposure, unless the dread disease which seemed to nerve him to unusual heroism and sacrifice intimidated the other officers who might have been sent to his relief. Of course it is impossible to say what might have been the result had he been furnished with proper assistance by the Department and seasonably relieved, but nearly every representative man in the Navy, from the highest to the lowest, as though conscious that this officer's life had been culpably put at risk, if not sacrificed, has petitioned Congress for the passage of this bill. The least reparation that the country can make for this fatal neglect is to provide reasonably for the support and education of his little children.

The report of the House committee is hereto appended, and is referred to as a truthful statement of the facts of the case.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments: Strike out, in the seventh, eighth, and ninth lines, the words "to date from the 22d day of August, 1883, on which day the said Surg. Alfred M. Owen died, and," and also after the word "them," in the fifteenth line.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report of the House committee appended to the report be printed.

The report referred to is as follows:

The naval career of the deceased officer, which began in May, 1869, was one of exceptional credit, and was made conspicuous by an unusually wide range of duties by sea and land. From his entry into the service until his death he was constantly employed, exercising professional attainments of a very high order, and that he dignified every duty assigned him by the zeal, courage, fidelity, and intelligence displayed in its execution, is the testimony of all who knew him.

He was always conscientious, earnest, skillful, kind, and courteous, commanding thereby the affection and confidence of the sick and the respect and admiration of his superiors.

In February, 1882, he reported for duty at the navy-yard, Pensacola, and a few months later was combating the much-dreaded yellow fever. By his judicious sanitary provisions and personal force and courage he established a cordon of environment which preserved the naval station from the plague which devastated the neighboring city. At the height of the epidemic, when the physicians had been cut off by the fell disease, he bravely volunteered to go into the city to attend the afflicted.

In the following summer (1883) he was, without medical assistance, performing the quadruple duty of surgeon of the navy-yard, surgeon of the naval hospital, surgeon of the reservation, and quarantine officer of the lower bay.

A return of the fever was looked for. Every officer who could be spared was permitted to leave, and this brave officer could have been detached upon application, but he scorned the thought.

August 14, 1883, the fever reappeared. Overexertion and exposure to the sun had caused Surgeon Owen a partial sun-stroke in July, and while yet suffering from this, he was on August 16 himself seized with the fever. For two days there was no one on land to treat the hero, and on the 22d he died. His faithful wife was untiring in her efforts at his bedside, and within a day or so after his death she was stricken with the same disease; at midnight on the 29th she was buried by his side.

They left behind them four children between the ages of three months and eight years, each of whom and their nurse also had the fever.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the error is in the print of the Calendar, that the bill as read is the correct one.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator knows the facts, I suppose, and will state them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read a part of a report that was made in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be explained. Will the amendment increase or diminish what the bill now proposes to give?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will increase the pension somewhat, and I will give the reasons why it should be increased. I read now a statement from Hon. WILLIAM WARNER, a member of the House of Representatives, and late the United States district attorney for the western district of Missouri, residing in Kansas City, Mo., and an intimate friend and acquaintance of Captain Gwynne:

Major WARNER says:

Permit me to state that for many years I was intimately acquainted with Mr. Gwynne. He lost his arm at Petersburg, July 30, 1864; at the same time he received a gunshot wound in the knee. For two years before his death I was, through business connected with the Grand Army of the Republic, in company with the deceased nearly every day. He was a great sufferer from his wounds, that in the knee being a running sore. Time and time again he has told me of his sufferings from these wounds. His nervous system was broken down, so much so that at times he had no more control over himself than a child. He often said to me that he knew his injuries would cause his death, yet if he had his life to live over again, if his country needed his services, he would cheerfully give them, even with the absolute knowledge that he would be thus mangled. This I believe, for no braver man than Gwynne ever entered the Army. As a beardless soldier boy, on July 30, 1864, he daringly rescued the flag of his country from the very jaws of the enemy's guns; in returning with it to his regiment his arm was almost torn from its shoulder, but he held on to the flag, returning it to the Union line baptized with his blood. For his heroic conduct on that day he received one of the few gold medals which Congress ordered to be presented for distinguished bravery on the battlefield. I do not entertain a doubt that but for his wounds he would have been alive and well to-day. He has left a wife and one child, a boy, in destitute circumstances.

I believe he was one of probably five, if I am not mistaken, private soldiers who received the thanks of Congress and a gold medal.

Mr. BLAIR. He was a captain in rank at his death, was he not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at the time the wound was received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did this man receive the thanks of Congress?

Mr. COCKRELL. He did, and a gold medal, and was one I think of only five who did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Twenty-five dollars is little enough. It would be better to make it $30 while we are about it.

Mr. BLAIR. That is all well enough. I am not ordinarily accused of any tendency to hold on to the purse-strings of the country, and I am not disposed to object to the amendment as the Senator from Missouri proposes that it be made. The widow, if she were the widow of a captain, would be entitled to $20 per month as the bill now stands. It has passed the House and has come here, and it will have to be returned for concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no trouble about concurrence in the amendment. We always called him "captain." I knew him well. He was not a captain in the volunteer service, but a captain afterward in a militia organization.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if his conduct as a private soldier had been so conspicuous that he received the thanks of Congress, that ought to be enough to entitle this poor woman to $25.

Mr. BLAIR. But the Senator from Vermont suggests $30. Suppose we call it $40. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri proposes $25.

Mr. COCKRELL. Twenty-five dollars will be satisfactory to her.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

PENSION BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call attention to the several cases upon the Calendar in which it was said that the papers were not on the files. I should like to know if the clerks have been able to find those bills as yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bills have been sent to the Printer and have not yet been returned, and so they are not on the files.

Mr. BLAIR. All the cases that have been passed which have been reported since those were must have been sent to the Printer also, and they were subsequent reports.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just a moment ago I sent up to the document-room to see if they had come in, and then I telephoned for them to be sent here.

Mr. BLAIR. They are cases which it is desirable to have disposed of. Will the Secretary be so kind as to specify the orders of business where the papers are absent? The first is Order of Business 802, as I have the memorandum.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think they run from Order of Business 802 to 808, inclusive, if I have it correctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills referred to will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 743, a bill (S. 1257) granting a pension to Henry Shively.

Mr. BLAIR. Those papers have not been found, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the bill in that case is not on the files. The next bill in the class will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 805, a bill (S. 860) granting an increase of pension to John N. Runyan.

Mr. BLAIR. How is it with Order of Business 802? That, I understand, is missing also.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 802, a bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins.

Order of Business 806, a bill (S. 1152) granting a pension to Sarah E. Bassett.

Mr. BLAIR. How is it with Order of Business 803, House bill 1462? Was that passed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been passed. The next bill in the list will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 807, a bill (S. 1102) granting an increase of pension to Dr. A. Lanning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills in the cases just reported by the Secretary are not on the files.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I suppose they must be passed over. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) for the relief of soldiers of the late war honorably discharged after six months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator from Illinois insist on going on with that bill now?

Mr. CULLOM. I think I shall insist on it now. The Senator from New Hampshire will come in with his bill after the interstate-commerce bill is disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to have any collision with the Senator from Illinois if he desires to go on with the interstate commerce bill to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. I prefer that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Illinois to allow the unfinished business to be informally laid aside for a moment in order that I may ask the Senate to consider House bill 7467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. HARRIS. It is not on the Calendar; it has just come from the House of Representatives. On the 2d of March the Committee on Military Affairs reported Senate bill 557, which is precisely the same as the House bill. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] and myself compared them yesterday. I therefore ask the Senate to proceed to consider the House bill at this time, and if it leads to any debate or consumes any time, then I shall not ask to trespass upon the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. With that understanding I hardly feel at liberty to deny the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

STREET IN CHATTANOOGA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 7467) to grant for the use of the public a street across the United States grounds in the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is there any communication from the War Department on the subject?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], who made the report from the Committee on Military Affairs, informs me that the bill was modified to meet the precise view of the Secretary of War.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I now move to indefinitely postpone the bill (S. 557) to grant for the use of the public a street across the United States grounds in the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, in compliance with section 4863 of the Revised Statutes, appointed Mr. WALTHALL a director on the part of the Senate of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. JACKSON.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

ENGINEER MENOCAL'S REPORT.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, it was Ordered, That the order to print the report of Chief Engineer A. G. Menocal, received by the Senate on March 16, on the Nicaraguan Canal, be rescinded, and that the question of printing be referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

GOVERNMENT GROUND IN NEWPORT.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to take up the bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. With the understanding that it will lead to no debate, I have no objection to its consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. W. MARSTON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield just one moment while I call up the bill (S. 220) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses. If the bill leads to any discussion, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. CULLOM. Three or four Senators have made a similar request. With the understanding that if any measure which is called up in this way leads to debate it shall not be pressed, I am willing to yield to the Senators who have spoken to me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call up Senate bill 220, and ask unanimous consent that it be put upon its passage. It has been reported repeatedly by the Senate committee and has passed the Senate twice.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIMBER ON WISCONSIN INDIAN LAND.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 55) to authorize the sale of timber on certain lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin. It is a bill which has twice passed the Senate. I think there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, line 7, after the word "Wisconsin," to strike out the words "excepting the sixteenth sections, which have been reserved to the State for school purposes;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be appraised and sold the timber, or such portion thereof as in his judgment is for the interest of the tribe, upon the lands reserved for the use of the Menomonee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. DAWES. I think on further examination of the subject that the amendment ought not to be adopted. The Supreme Court have decided that all such land belongs to the State and we should not except it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAWES. In section 1, beginning in line 12, I think the proviso should be stricken out, which reads as follows:

Provided, That such appraisal shall not include any growing tree or trees of less than 12 inches in diameter at the butt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to strike out the proviso which he has indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The colon in line 12 will be changed to a period to make it conform.

Mr. DAWES. Striking out the proviso requires an amendment in the second section. After the word "thereof," in line 8 of the second section, I move that the following words be stricken out:

Said notice shall state, and the timber be offered for sale with the express understanding, that growing timber of less than 12 inches in diameter at the butt is not to be included in the sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHŒNIX NATIONAL BANK OF NEW YORK.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the Phœnix National Bank of the city of New York, a bill reported by the Judiciary Committee without amendment, and to which I suppose no objections will be made.

Mr. CULLOM. I make no objection with the understanding that there will be no debate.

Mr. EVARTS. That is the understanding.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $29,624.35 to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to reimburse the Phœnix National Bank of the city of New York the amount paid by that bank in satisfaction of two judgments obtained against the bank in the supreme court of the State of New York on the 14th of February, 1878, and on the 20th of November, 1879, in an action brought against the bank by David Risley to recover a certain deposit which had been illegally seized and confiscated by the United States of America.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOUNT DESERT FERRY PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. FRYE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 1013) providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Mount Desert Ferry, in the town of Hancock, in the State of Maine. The bill has been reported unanimously twice by the Committee on Commerce and passed the Senate unanimously once.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if there is any particular necessity for the establishment of a port of entry there?

Mr. FRYE. There is an absolute necessity. The Maine Central Railroad has just established freight depots there, and there is a very large amount of freight coming from foreign countries which otherwise would have to go 40 miles up the river. The bill has passed the Senate before, and it was reported from the Committee on Commerce unanimously.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENODOR TEN EYCK.

Mr. HAMPTON. I appeal to the good-nature of the Senator from Illinois and ask unanimous consent to take up a bill which he introduced. I think it will lead to no discussion. It has passed the Senate twice.

Mr. CULLOM. I recognize the propriety of yielding to the request of the Senator from South Carolina, as he has been unavoidably absent for some time. I will do so with the understanding that the bill will lead to no discussion.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 519) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers.

Mr. MILLER. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment. The amendment will be first stated, after which the report will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "empowered," it is proposed to strike out the words "to restore" and insert "to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint;" so as to read:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to his former rank in the Army, and to place upon the retired-list of Army officers, Tenedore Ten Eyck, late a captain in the Eighteenth United States Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. CULLOM and others. Oh, no.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON January 14:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1300) to authorize the President to restore Tenodor Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and place him upon the retired-list of Army officers, have considered the same, and they beg leave to adopt the report made by the committee at the last session, as follows:

"That an examination of the papers submitted shows the following facts:

"Captain Ten Eyck entered the volunteer service as a private, and in 1862 he was commissioned a captain in the Eighteenth United States Infantry. In 1863 he was brevetted major for gallant conduct, and at the battle of Chickamauga he was taken prisoner. On account of illness he was paroled in 1864, and joined his regiment as soon as his health permitted him to do so, serving with it on the Western frontier until 1871, when he was dropped from the rolls under the provisions of the act of July 15, 1870. In this latter year, while on sick leave and a confirmed invalid on account of diseases contracted in the line of duty, he was ordered before a medical board for examination, with a view to his retirement. This board, composed of two Army surgeons, while admitting the chronic character of the diseases from which Major Ten Eyck was suffering, reported him, in their opinion, as "not incapacitated for active service." But certificates from many prominent physicians, who had known and attended Major Ten Eyck for years, show that his diseases were not temporary in 1870, but chronic, and that he was not only not fit for duty then, but has been unfit ever since.

The testimony of these physicians and of other parties who know Major Ten Eyck intimately, given under oath, have brought your committee to the conclusion that the examining board were mistaken in the opinion expressed in his case. Had they pronounced him unfit for active service, he would then have been placed on the retired-list, and it seems but justice to him that this should be now done. His health has gradually grown worse since 1870, and he is now a confirmed invalid. As a general rule your committee have not recommended the restoration to the Army of officers dropped under the operation of the act of 1870, but regarding the case of Major Ten Eyck as an exceptional one, they recommend the passage of the bill for his relief, as amended by the committee.

The affidavits submitted to the committee in reference to the health of Major Ten Eyck are transmitted herewith, to be appended to this report.

I further certify that at the time he appeared before the retiring board, in 1870, he was an invalid, and had just arisen from a terrible sickness, and was, by his physicians (Drs. Nash and Dyas), considered totally unfitted to make the journey in order to appear before that board.

Since the year 1868, when first I prescribed for Major Ten Eyck, I have repeatedly been called on to prescribe for him. He has suffered from chronic diarrhea, hemorrhoids, and chronic rheumatism, with few intermissions of the latter, but continuously from the two former. I have, since I first knew him, considered him a man of shattered constitution, and unable to perform efficiently any duty requiring even an inconsiderable application of physical power.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ALICE C. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business No. 2, being the resolution to pay Alice C. Underwood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, reported by Mr. CHACE from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate March 19, 1885, as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Alice C. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ROCHESTER PUBLIC BUILDING.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5549) limiting the cost of the erection of a public building at Rochester, N. Y.

Mr. CULLOM. With the understanding that it will be withdrawn if it leads to debate I have no objection.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It increases the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Rochester, N. Y., to $500,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS ROSA WALLACE.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1805) for the relief of Miss Rosa Wallace. It is a local matter, and the bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to credit the accounts of Miss Rosa Wallace, postmaster at Washington, Ark., with the sum of $381, which sum was lost by robbery of the mails at or near Hope, Ark., on or about November 30, 1884.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES G. MARTIN.

Mr. VANCE. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 1533) for the relief of James G. Martin, late captain and assistant quartermaster and assistant commissary of subsistence, United States Army, and his heirs and legal representatives.

No objection was made.

Mr. VANCE. I understand that a House bill, of which this is a precise copy, has been passed by that body. I move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the number of the House bill?

Mr. VANCE. I have not the number before me, but it is verbatim with the Senate bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not proceed without the bill. The bill is not on the Calendar, but is still in the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VANCE. Very well; then I will let it go; I prefer to have the House bill passed.

INDIAN LANDS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 770) relating to the lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that actual and bona fide settlers on lands subject to pre-emption under existing laws within the late Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indian reservation, in Colorado, who have previously taken land under the pre-emption laws, may take an additional 160 acres, by paying therefor $1.25 per acre, at any time after a bona fide residence on the land of two years, and within thirty-three months after filing declaratory statement therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METHODIST PROTESTANT FOREIGN MISSIONS BOARD.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1008, which has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia. There will not be any discussion on the bill. It will take but a moment to pass it.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that it is necessary for me to state every time that I am yielding with the understanding that the consideration of these bills does not interfere with the unfinished business, which is the interstate commerce bill, and that there is to be no discussion on the bills which are called up in this way.

Mr. BROWN. I will withdraw the bill if it leads to any discussion. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1008) to empower the board of foreign missions of the Methodist Protestant Church to hold property in the District of Columbia.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church, which is incorporated by the laws of Pennsylvania, is hereby empowered to hold real and personal property in the District of Columbia, acquired, or that shall be acquired, by gift, devise, or bequest, and the same enjoy, rent, or convey at pleasure as freely as any person or body corporate can do: Provided, That the net incomes of the property to be held by said company shall not exceed $20,000 per annum.

Mr. HOAR. I think there should be a limitation on the amount of property as a permanent policy in dealing with such corporations. It is the policy in all the States. It should not exceed the amount of $150,000 or $250,000.

Mr. BROWN. Not to exceed $20,000 is the provision of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. That is the income.

Mr. BROWN. Almost all the other Churches have more.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill by inserting that the value of the property shall not exceed at any one time $250,000.

Mr. BROWN. I make no objection to that amendment. It can be considered hereafter if it is necessary to make any change.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will repeat his amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I move to add at the end of the bill:

And that the value of the property so held shall not exceed at any one time the sum of $250,000.

Mr. BROWN. I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

SPRINGFIELD PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 1397) to establish a port of delivery at Springfield, in the State of Massachusetts. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce, and the bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. BOWERS.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 224) for the relief of Charles F. Bowers.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The preamble recites that about the 9th of August, 1862, Charles F. Bowers, then first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the Eighth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, received from George H. Weeks, then captain and assistant quartermaster of United States volunteers, $230, being funds of the United States belonging to the Quartermaster Department of the Army, and was unable technically to "account" for the same as required by the rules of the Treasury Department, because of the loss and destruction of his official books and papers during the campaign of 1862 under General John Pope, and that it appears by the evidence on file in the Third Auditor's Office of the Treasury Department that the money was nevertheless actually and lawfully disbursed by Bowers in the execution of the duties of his office, though unable to furnish formal vouchers therefor because of the loss and destruction of his books and papers. The bill directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow a credit for $230 to Bowers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BRIDGES IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4670) granting to the county of Clatsop, in the State of Oregon, the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the said county and State. It is a local matter.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the word "Oregon," to strike out the words "and its court and duly authorized officers and agents, in the name of said county and under the authority of said court are" and to insert "is," and in line 7, after the word "State," to insert "at such point as said county may select and may be approved by the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 13, after the word "prescribe," to insert:

And also to construct, establish, and maintain a bridge across Skipanon Creek, in the county of Clatsop, in the State of Oregon, by permanent embankment or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may approve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 21, to strike out the word "bridge" and insert "bridges."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 11, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" in line 12, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" in line 14, after the word "bay," to insert "and Young's Creek;" so as to read:

And the United States shall have the right of way for a telegraph across said bridges; the said bridges to be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation on said bay and creek as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 18, after the word "bridge," to insert "across Young's Bay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 30, after the word "floats," to insert "also showing the Skipanon Creek to the head of usual navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after the word "bay," to insert "and said creek;" in line 4, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" in line 5, before the word "accessory," to strike out the word "its," and after the word "said," in the same line, to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" and in line 7, after the word "said," to strike out "bridge" and insert "bridges;" so as to read:

That Congress shall have power, at any time, to alter or amend this act so as to prevent or remove all material and substantial obstructions to the navigation of said bay and said creek by the construction of said bridges and accessory works; and the expense of altering said bridges or removing such obstructions shall be borne by the owner of said bridges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN A. MORRIS.

Mr. COLQUITT. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 274) for the relief of John A. Morris.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John A. Morris $117.10, that being the amount of a draft issued by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, which has not been paid, and which draft is now held by Morris.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE IN VERMONT.

Mr. HOAR. I ask to take up Senate bill 929, Order of Business No. 123.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that there are others who desire to present bills for consideration if he will pause a moment until we get around and each one has a chance. The Senator has already been in on this Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. The other was not a bill but a resolution. However, I will yield.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; I do not object. Proceed.

Mr. HOAR. It is fair that I should yield. I will yield to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 63) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain lying between the towns of North Hero and Alburg, in the State of Vermont. There is no amendment to the bill and it will take but a moment to dispose of it.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

Mr. GRAY. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 100) for the relief of William H. Crook.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent, the amount being the same as was formerly paid for such service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better have the report read or a statement of the bill made. I think I recollect that old case. It is a case where a man is attempting to draw two salaries.

Mr. GRAY. Does the Senator from Missouri ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. COCKRELL. If it is short let the report be read.

Mr. GRAY. Yes, it is short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. GRAY January 13:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 100) for the relief of William H. Crook, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate report No. 144, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, which said report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

"By the act of July 4, 1836 (Revised Statutes, section 450), Congress authorized the President to appoint a secretary with the title of "secretary to the President to sign land patents," at a salary of $1,500 per annum. This officer was continued down to 1878, having no other duty imposed upon him except to sign, in the President's name, the patents issued by the Government on the sales and grants of public lands. Under the act above cited this officer, although in name a secretary to the President, was, in fact, and was recognized by the law as, an officer of the Land Department, and during the greater part at least of the period above stated he occupied a room and desk in the General Land Office, having no duties to perform and no place at the Executive Mansion.

"By act of June 20, 1878 (20 Statutes, page 183), the appropriation for payment of the salary of this officer was omitted, and the President was directed to designate one of his executive clerks to perform the duty of signing land patents.

"Mr. William H. Crook was then, and had been since 1871, an executive clerk, acting as disbursing officer of the Executive Mansion, and also in charge of the reception room. All of these duties he has continued to perform down to the present time. In addition to them he was designated by the President, July 1, 1878, as secretary to sign land patents, and since that time all the patents issued on sales and grants of public lands have passed under his hand.

"The number of patents issued since July 1, 1878, has averaged about forty thousand each year, and has steadily increased. The labor of the secretary in executing same has been very onerous, each patent having two signatures attached, and all having to be checked off and accounted for. On account of his regular duties at the Executive Mansion, Mr. Crook has been compelled to perform most of this extra work of signing patents out of office hours; but, notwithstanding this fact, we are assured that the work has been done more promptly and efficiently than when an officer was charged with the performance of this duty alone. In fact, Mr. Crook has, in addition to the other duties of his position, since July 1, 1878, performed, without compensation in any form, labor for which from 1836 to 1878 the Government paid $1,500 per annum.

"We attach hereto, as exhibits, letters of Hon. J. A. Williamson, late Commissioner of the General Land Office, and Hon. W. K. Rogers, private secretary to President Hayes, both of whom from their official positions were familiar with the labor performed by Mr. Crook, and the time and manner of its execution.

"It seems to your committee that he is in justice and equity entitled to a fair compensation.

"Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be passed with the following amendment, viz: In line 6, strike out the word 'six' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'three.'"

The committee, therefore, adopt said Senate report as the report of this committee, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as amended.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 30, 1881.

SIR: Your note of this date is at hand. I fully agree with you that you should have extra compensation for signing land patents. Before this additional duty was assigned to you the President's secretary to sign land patents was allowed $1,500 a year for that service, and I think the service was worth the amount. The responsibility of the position, in addition to the clerical labor, is very considerable, and should be paid for. I think you are fully entitled to extra compensation, and sincerely hope that it may be given you.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. A. WILLIAMSON.

Col. W. H. CROOK,
Executive Mansion, City.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 18, 1881.

DEAR SIR: I entirely agree with you that you should receive extra compensation for signing land patents. During the four years while I was private secretary to the President your regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing officer were sufficient to keep you employed all the time during office hours. The additional service you render in signing land patents was necessarily performed out of office hours, the greater part of it night-work. Upon the omission by Congress (the act of June 30, 1878) of the usual provision for the salary of the secretary of the President to sign land patents, and the requirement that the President should designate one of the executive clerks to discharge the duties of the office, you were selected by President Hayes because of your familiarity with the work, having temporarily filled the position during the illness of the secretary appointed for the purpose by President Grant. It is a laborious and responsible position, and the work was carefully, diligently, and faithfully performed. I earnestly trust Congress will allow you full compensation for the service rendered.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. ROGERS.

W. H. CROOK,
Executive Clerk to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 26, 1884.

DEAR SIR: It gives me pleasure to say in behalf of Mr. William H. Crook that while in the Senate I had occasion to examine into the merits of his claim for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents, and that I consider it a proper claim and favored it at that time. I think Mr. Crook is justly entitled to the compensation allowed by the bill as it passed the Senate in April last.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN,
Chairman of the Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems impossible for Congress to prevent certain parties in Washington from drawing two salaries. Here was a clerk in the executive office drawing a certain salary. It was thought that there was no necessity for that office and for that salary to be paid, and that the clerks at the Executive Mansion could perform the duty. The office was discontinued and no appropriation was made for it——

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the understanding was that there should be no discussion on bills called up.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will only take two minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being objection, the bill will go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must object to it then.

Mr. GRAY. I am very sorry. If the Senator will withhold his objection I think in a single word I can remove it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state to the Senator that this is an old resident with the Committee on Claims. We have had it here for ten years, and it has been reported adversely.

Mr. GRAY. You could not have had it here for ten years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, we have had it here for eight years.

Mr. GRAY. No, sir, not for eight years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been reported adversely by the Committee on Claims and defeated.

Mr. GRAY. It was reported favorably.

Mr. CONGER. I think it was never reported adversely.

Mr. GRAY. Never, sir.

Mr. CONGER. But it was reported favorably and passed the Senate. I must correct the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being objection, the bill must go over.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask unanimous consent to put on its passage the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be read for information.

Mr. BLAIR. I object to the disposition of the bill without debate. It is a very important bill, and it can not be disposed of under the terms under which bills are taken up at the present time, as I understand. The Senator from Nebraska certainly can not expect that this bill, which relates to the taxation of all lands held by land-grant railroads, is to pass without discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLAIR. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I give notice that to-morrow after the routine morning business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

CAPT. ANDREW W. JOHNSON.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S 747) for the relief of Capt. Andrew W. Johnson.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Andrew W. Johnson, now a captain on the retired-list of the Navy, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commodore upon the retired-list of the Navy from the date of his retirement as a captain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrosssed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 929) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Albert H. Emery, of Stamford, Conn., in full settlement of all claims, legal or equitable, which he has in any way against the United States on account of the cost of, and the time spent by him, and use of all patents and inventions in designing and constructing the testing-machine built and erected by him for the United States, or otherwise, in any way, on account of the machine, $200,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS WITHIN RAILWAY LIMITS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 129.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. 129) to protect homestead settlers within railway limits, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 12, after the word "cultivation," to strike out "and in all such entries patents shall issue as soon as reported to and approved by the General Land Commissioner;" so as to read:

That all homestead settlers on public lands within the railway limits restricted to less than 160 acres of land, who have heretofore made or may hereafter make the additional entry allowed either by the act approved March 3, 1879, or the act approved July 1, 1879, after having made final proof of settlement and cultivation under the original entry, shall be entitled to have the lands covered by the additional entry patented without any further cost or proof of settlement and cultivation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES G. MARTIN.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the Senate now to take up Order of Business 211.

Mr. CULLOM. I think I have been yielding now long enough, and I give notice that after the bill of the Senator from North Carolina is disposed of, if there is no discussion connected with it, I shall ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks for the consideration of Order of Business 211, being the bill (S. 1533) for the relief of James G. Martin, late captain and assistant quartermaster and assistant commissary of subsistence, United States Army, and his heirs and legal representatives. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VANCE. I move to substitute the House bill, in charge of the Committee on Military Affairs, which is a precise copy of this.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senator ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill and that the House bill be taken up and passed and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that to be the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. That is what I design.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5539) for the relief of James G. Martin.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to relieve James G. Martin, late captain and assistant quartermaster and assistant commissary of subsistence, United States Army, and his heirs and legal representatives, from liability to the United States on account of any moneys disbursed by Martin as assistant commissary of subsistence; and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are directed to close the accounts of Martin as assistant commissary of subsistence. The amount for which credit shall be given is not to exceed $325.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are the House and Senate bills in the same terms?

Mr. COCKRELL. The identical language.

Mr. VANCE. The two bills are in identical language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WALTHALL February 16:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of Hetty Martin, widow of Capt. James G. Martin, deceased, having considered the same, report as follows:

Your committee present the following communication from the honorable Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, February 5, 1886.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 21st ultimo, requesting to be furnished with any information on file in this Department bearing on Senate bill 560, for the relief of Hetty Martin, widow of Capt. James G. Martin, deceased, late assistant quartermaster, United States Army, I have the honor to inclose copies of the papers submitted to the House Committee on War Claims on the 28th ultimo (in response to a similar inquiry), which, it is believed, will afford the information desired.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. E. C. WALTHALL,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, U. S. Senate.

The copies of papers referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter dated January 14, 1886, from the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, requesting information relative to a claim for the relief of the estate of the late Capt. James G. Martin, assistant quartermaster, United States Army.

The voucher referred to is supposed to be voucher No. 3, second quarter 1861, abstract of purchases, which voucher appears from the records of this office to have been returned to Maj. J. G. Martin, assistant quartmaster, by letter of June 11, 1861 (copy inclosed), for correction. It appears that the voucher was signed only "Robert Wilson," whereas it should have been signed "Robert Wilson & Co.," as required by regulations.

I have the honor also to inclose a copy of my indorsement of November 3, 1885, referring to the Third Auditor a letter of October 30, 1885, from Mr. J. G. Martin, relating to this matter, in which I recommend that, if practicable, credit be given for the amount of the voucher.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. MACFEELY,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

J. G. Martin, Asheville, N. C., October 30, 1885, in reference to his efforts to obtain for his mother three months' extra pay due his father, late brevet major, United States Army; also to a stoppage of $325 by the Third Auditor.

[First indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, November 3, 1885.

Respectfully referred to the Third Auditor of the Treasury, remarking that the records of this office show that the voucher No. 3, referred to in the within statement of differences, was returned June 11, 1861, as shown by the accompanying copy of letter of Commissary-General of Subsistence of that date, and they do not show that it has ever been received back.

From the facts stated in the inclosed letter of October 30, 1885, from Mr. J. G. Martin to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, it is regarded as highly probable that the letter of June 11, 1861, never reached the officer.

The corn for which payment was made by the voucher No. 3, second quarter 1861, having been accounted for by the officer, as will be shown by his return of provisions for April, 1861, on file in the Third Auditor's Office, it is recommended that, if practicable under the circumstances, credit be allowed therefor in the settlement of Maj. James G. Martin's accounts as A. C. S.

R. MACFEELY,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

OFFICE COMMISSARY-GENERAL OF SUBSISTENCE,
Washington, D. C., June 11, 1861.

MAJOR: Inclosed you will receive voucher No. 3, of your abstract of purchases for the second quarter 1861. The purchase was made of "Robert Wilson & Co.," but the voucher was signed only by Robert Wilson. You will please make the necessary correction, and return the paper at your earliest convenience.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. P. TAYLOR,
Commissary-General of Subsistence.

Maj. J. G. MARTIN, A. Q. M.,
Fort Riley, Kansas.

On the facts appearing in the foregoing papers your committee are of opinion that the credit provided for in the bill should be given, and they submit herewith an original bill in lieu of the bill under consideration, which they consider preferable for the purpose in view.

Your committee recommend the passage of the new bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. Before that question is put I desire to make a statement. I have been disposed to yield to the consideration of various bills where there has been no discussion this afternoon in the hope that when the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill in relation to commerce it will be disposed to continue its consideration from day to day until it is acted on. So far as I am advised, I do not believe the consideration of the bill will require very much time, and I hope we may be able to dispose of it to-morrow. I shall ask the Senate to proceed with its consideration at 2 o'clock to-morrow and continue with it until it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a letter from the Commissioner of Railroads, inclosing copies of correspondence and documents relating to discriminations against the Denver and New Orleans Railroad by other land-grant railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM, CANADA DE COCHITI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the president of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPLANATION OF A PAIR.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. On Monday last I was called out of the Hall to give attention to a matter of public concern in which my constituents were much interested, but before leaving arranged with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] to pair with me on the vote on the resolution which was then pending, presented by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, giving that committee a day for a hearing before the House. After making that arrangement I remained in the Hall as long as possible, hoping that a vote would be reached before it was necessary for me to leave. Before a vote was reached, however, I was compelled to leave the Hall, and left under the impression that the pair was arranged and was in force. I find that the pair is not recorded, and I am reported as absent and not voting on that resolution. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] is recorded as having voted in the negative. I should have voted in the affirmative. I wish to make this statement in justice to myself.

Mr. SWOPE. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague on the committee from North Corolina had spoken to me in reference to this pair, and I agreed to pair with him in case he was obliged to leave the Hall before the vote was taken. But as the question of his leaving was somewhat uncertain, and, as on looking around several times afterward I saw he was still in the Hall, I naturally concluded, as the pair was conditional, he had not left, and that it was not in force. The matter afterward escaped my attention, and when the roll was called I voted under the impression that Mr. JOHNSTON was here and had voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the pair of the gentleman from North Carolina appears to have been made with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and was to take effect on the 20th. The vote to which he refers was on the 19th.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Yes, sir; but that pair is on the river and harbor bill. My pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the other resolution, giving a day to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 1851, establishing a commission to report to Congress on manuscripts belonging to the Government, and put the same upon its passage.

This, I will say, is simply a bill which provides for creating a commission to look into and edit the papers which have been bought and which have been donated to the Government from time to time—manuscripts belonging to the Government which have never been edited—and devise some plan by which they may be given to the world, such papers as the Franklin papers, the Rochambeau papers, and others of that kind. It will not involve a dollar of expense.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, that bill I suppose can be called up by the committee in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It is a public bill.

Mr. BEACH. Then I think it had better come up in its regular order.

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope the gentleman will not object. It is simply to create this commission and does not involve a dollar of expense.

Mr. BEACH. I desire to have the rules of the House enforced and for that reason I must object.

REGISTRY OF BARGE MICHIGAN.

Mr. TARSNEY. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to register and enroll, according to the provisions of title 48 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the vessel or barge called Michigan, now in process of rebuilding at Alpena, Mich., and to issue to the owners thereof certificates of registry and enrollment, as provided in said title; and that hereafter the said vessel or barge shall be subject to all the provisions of said title.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TARSNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The later motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 606) authorizing the removal of the statue of Maj. Gen. John A. Rawlins from its present location to a site to be selected by the Secretary of War, and that it be considered now.

The bill was read.

Mr. BEACH. I suggest that the gentleman can call that bill up for consideration in the second morning hour. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Why did not the gentleman object to the bill just passed, which was called up on his side of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

CONSIDERATION OF ELECTORAL-COUNT BILL.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 4th of May, 1886 (and from day to day thereafter until disposed of), immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill No. 9, to provide for and regulate the electoral count; not to interfere with revenue or general appropriation bills, the river and harbor bill, nor with prior orders, nor with consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Lands under the special order; and if the consideration of said Senate bill No. 9 be displaced, then the next day not previously set apart shall be devoted to its consideration until the same shall be disposed of, subject to the above-mentioned interferences.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir. I object. The only reason I have for objecting is that I have a similar resolution on the Calendar, assigning time for the consideration of bills from the Military Committee.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. WARD, of Illinois, for four days, on account of important business, and to Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, until Friday next.

GRAIN STATISTICS.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House at his earliest convenience the amount of wheat and corn now on hand in this country, where they are located, with the probable home requirements of each until September 1, 1886, as compared with amounts on hand and domestic requirements at similar periods during the past five years; the number of acres of winter and spring wheat each, respectively, now in the ground to make the coming crop, as compared with the past five years at date of his report; the amount of wheat and corn each, respectively, likely to be required by each importing country, with the present surplus on hand in each exporting country to supply such requirements until September 1, 1886; the amount of wheat sown in all other countries for this year's crop, with their probable surplus or shortage during the coming year; said report to be confined to the questions asked in this resolution, and all of its statements of amounts given in bushels and acres according to American measurement.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HATCH. I am also instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be instructed to furnish, for the information of the House, a statement showing what portion of the $51,500 appropriated for the "chemical division" and "laboratory" for the present fiscal year has been expended, and for what purpose, giving a detailed statement of all expenditures, and of the balance on hand.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Patents, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4458) to limit the jurisdiction of United States courts in patent cases, and to protect persons who, without notice, are bona fide manufacturers, purchasers, venders, and users of articles, machines, machinery, and other things for the exclusive use, manufacture, or sale of which a patent has been or may hereafter be granted; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Tyler at Bahia, Brazil; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CHARGE OF DESERTION.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

Mr. BOUTELLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported, in lieu of the bills hereinafter indicated, a bill (H. R. 1017) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy or Marine Corps from the charge of desertion.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one which I have no idea will excite the slightest discussion. It is a measure which was favorably reported in the last Congress, and the object of which was on several occasions supposed to have been accomplished by an amendment to a bill providing for the removal of charges of desertion affecting soldiers of the United States. The object of this bill and its entire scope is to apply to appointed and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps precisely the provisions and conditions of the act of July 5, 1884, as applied to the soldiers of the United States. The measure has been considered by the Naval Committee and reported by that committee unanimously. It has the approval of the Navy Department, and in the report accompanying the bill is embodied the letter of the Judge-Advocate-General, who was consulted on the subject, and in accordance with whose suggestions the bill has been framed. It simply applies to the appointed and enlisted men of the Navy and the Marine Corps the familiar provisions of the act of July 5, 1884, providing for relief from charges of desertion in certain instances.

Mr. BEACH. I think this bill had better take the usual course.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] that the principle of this measure as affecting soldiers has been thoroughly debated, and the only possible question involved here is as to the propriety of extending to the Navy the same relief which has already been extended to the Army.

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has the right to report the bill for reference to the Calendar but not for consideration. The bill will be considered as read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed. There appear to be many other bills reported along with this.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The bill which I have presented is reported as a substitute for a number of private relief bills relating to cases which are covered by the provisions of the general bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill already reported is then in lieu of these various other bills, which, if there be no objection, will be laid on the table.

There being no objection, bills and petitions of the following titles were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 764) to relieve certain sailors from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 1498) extending the provisions and benefits of the act approved August 7, 1862, entitled "An act to relieve certain soldiers of the late war of the charge of desertion," to certain naval recruits serving in the said war;

A bill (H. R. 1916) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Owen McCaffrey;

A bill (H. R. 3449) to remove the charge of desertion against William P. Farmer, late of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 3450) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Dennis B. Munsey, late of the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. 4602) to amend an act to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 6365) to remove the mark of desertion against the naval record of Edward Allen Morehouse;

A bill (H. R. 7720) for the relief of George P. Haven;

A petition of Josiah Wardwell, for removal of mark of desertion of Hiram F. Wardwell from the United States steamship Shenandoah; and

A petition of Andrew H. Barton, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion standing against him on the records of the Navy Department.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN PATERSON, N. J.

J.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 641, a bill (H. R. 8098) for pensioning prisoners of war who were confined in confederate military prisons during the late war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

R. 2528) to preserve the grave of General Daniel Morgan and erect a monument over the same; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN M. M'CLINTOCK.

JAMES R. CARTER.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 8099) for the relief of James R. Carter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA REESE M'KEE.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Rebecca Reese McKee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MEDIATION BETWEEN FRANCE AND CHINA.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back the following resolution with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be instructed to transmit, if not incompatible with the public interests, to the House of Representatives copies of all documents and correspondence between the State Department and the representatives of the Chinese, French, and American Governments with the State Department, and especially all dispatches, letters, or other communications passing between the representatives of said governments where the said correspondence relates to the good offices exerted by the United States to bring about an amicable arrangement of the questions lately in dispute between the Republic of France and the Empire of China, or relates to any other good offices or things done under that section of the treaty of peace, amity, and commerce between the United States of America and China, concluded June 18, 1858, which provides that "they shall not insult or oppress each other for any trifling cause, so as to produce any estrangement between them, and if any other nation should act unjustly or oppressively, the United States will exert their good offices, on being informed of the case, to bring about an amicable arrangement of the question, thus showing their friendly feelings."

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WORTHINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins thirteen minutes before 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on Appropriations. The first business in order is the bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in Alabama, and the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. On this question tellers were ordered, as no quorum had voted. The tellers, Mr. FORNEY and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, will resume their places.

A MEMBER. Mr. BBECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, is not present.

The Speaker appointed Mr. BEACH in place of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas.

Mr. BEACH. In order to save time I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Several MEMBERS. The point of no quorum was made by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Unless the point of no quorum is insisted upon the vote will be announced.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is insisted upon.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 119, noes 44.

The SPEAKER. Exactly a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in Alabama, on which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is entitled to the floor for twenty-three minutes.

Mr. FORNEY. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. OATES. The gentleman has controlled all the time so far on this bill in this House. No one has been recognized in opposition to it.

Mr. FORNEY. The opponents of this bill took up a half an hour yesterday by opposing the House going into committee to resume its consideration.

Mr. OATES. Ah! but not in debate.

Mr. FORNEY. I insist upon the regular order. I have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. OATES. I insist that the time be equally divided between the two sides.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman who reported the bill was entitled to an hour, and of that hour twenty-three minutes still remain.

Mr. OATES. He occupied that time on Saturday last.

Mr. FORNEY. I insist upon the regular order. I propose, after the gentleman from Illinois has been heard, to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH].

Mr. CANNON. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom did the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. FORNEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, on the 7th day of April this bill was reported by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY]. It provides for an appropriation of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the Secretary of War for subsistence stores to such destitute persons as require assistance in the districts recently overflowed by the rivers of Alabama; the object being to give rations to those destitute persons, and those only, who were suffering for food, starving, and could not be relieved in any other way. At the time this bill was reported two weeks ago the committee ascertained from a part of the delegation from Alabama, from telegrams from relief committees and from mayors of cities and eminent citizens of Alabama, that the floods, especially in the Alabama rivers, were more severe than ever known, and extended for hundreds of miles in their destructive course; that many people had been drowned, thousands of people had lost their homes and all their property, unable to get food, unable even to escape the floods. Most of these suffering people were negroes. True, their worldly possessions did not amount to much, but all they had was destroyed, and they were starving. The committee was also informed that the governor of Alabama, from constitutional scruples or otherwise, was slow to make an appeal to Congress for relief. Finally, on the 5th day of April, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] sent the following telegram to the governor of the State:

[Copy of telegram to governor of Alabama.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5, 1886.

GOV. A. E. O'NEIL,
Montgomery, Ala.:

Does the situation in Alabama require relief for the people injured by the flood which the State can not furnish?

What is needed—rations or money; at what points and what quantities?

Will the State undertake to distribute if Congress grants relief?

I telegraph by direction of the delegation.

WM. H. FORNEY.

On the next day he received from the governor the following reply:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 6, 1886.

HON. WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
House of Representatives:

There is distress and destitution in all the river counties of the State. The State can not give relief without a special session of the Legislature, which can not be had in time to meet the emergency. If Congress makes an appropriation let it be in money, and if thought best I will undertake its distribution. As at present advised, my opinion is that $150,000 will be sufficient.

A. E. O'NEIL, Governor.

Two weeks ago the bill was reported. Unanimous consent was asked to consider it at once. Objection was made. Subsequently the power under the Constitution to make the appropriation was discussed and every parliamentary obstruction was offered to the consideration of the bill. We may expound the Constitution, and gentlemen may resort to parliamentary obstruction, but the floods pay no attention to us; and in the mean time those unfortunate people were starving. I understand from the statement of some of the members from Alabama that the floods have somewhat subsided and that the immediate pressing necessity for this appropriation, so far as food is concerned, has passed; that those who could not get relief have starved and survived or starved and died. There was no intention upon the part of the Committee on Appropriations to recommend anything but immediate relief by furnishing food for those who could get it in no other way. This bill in a few minutes will go to its tomb on the Calendar of unfinished business.

Mr. Chairman, how different was the action of the last Congress touching the floods of the Ohio River two years ago! We appropriated then $500,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers. The citizens of the great States of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, and Indiana were relieved by that appropriation. Sir, I have no hesitation in saying if you take into consideration the condition of the flood sufferers of the Ohio as compared with the condition of the flood sufferers in Alabama that there was greater need of relief in the latter than in the former case. The States of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Kentucky, and Ohio are thickly settled, strong, and wealthy, while Alabama is sparsely settled, and the population affected by the flood poor, many of them ignorant, and, in the light of their great affliction, helpless. Besides, when we appropriated for the relief of the Ohio flood sufferers the Legislature of that great State was in session.

I wish I had time to read from the debate touching that bill. Nearly all of us were satisfied that under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, or some other clause, we had the right to make the appropriation, and substantially all of us were satisfied that in the presence of that great calamity humanity required a liberal construction of the Constitution, and we voted the aid; especially the gentlemen from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] ably advocated the appropriation. That bill passed—yeas 234, nays 12. Among the ayes were Messrs. BLOUNT, REAGAN, BURNES, CABELL, HEMPHILL, DUNN—substantially everybody on both sides of the House; nor do I want to fail to mention among the ayes the gentleman from Arkansas, whom I do not now see in his seat, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.

Among the twelve gentlemen voting "no" was Mr. OATES, from Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, if we are to take a new departure, to make a new precedent, I regret that we selected these poor flood-stricken people along the rivers of Alabama, most of them colored people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Alabama the other day asked unanimous consent in the House for the immediate consideration of this resolution I felt it to be my duty to object. I objected at that time because it was not in order under the rules of the House. I object now because I am unalterably opposed to the passage of the resolution.

I will yield, Mr. Chairman, to no one in the matter of sympathy for the wants of suffering humanity. I am willing to put my hand in my own pocket as deep as any member on the floor of this House for the purpose of extending relief to the Alabama sufferers; but I am not willing to indulge my sympathy and benevolence at the expense of the public by putting my hand into the pockets of others.

The money in the Treasury belongs to the country; it has been gathered from the great body of tax-payers throughout the country; it is there for governmental purposes, and not to be dispensed in charity at the whim, caprice, will, or favor of Congress. The proposition here is to take $150,000 out of the public Treasury for the benefit of the flood sufferers in Alabama. It is a proposition not only unconstitutional in itself, but an act of the grossest injustice toward hundreds and thousands of wage-workers throughout the land who to-day are just as poor and destitute as these Alabama sufferers.

Mr. Chairman, it is time that we should put a stop to this kind of legislation, and the party now in power is the party to stop it. It is to the Democratic party the people at this time look for relief in all these matters. The Democratic party has always insisted upon a strict construction of the Constitution, and it has declared over and over again that the powers of Congress are limited to the legitimate objects and functions of government. It is this feature more than any other which has distinguished the Democratic party from the numerous other parties which from time to time have arisen in this country in opposition to its principles. On the other hand, the Republican party has always favored a loose construction of the Constitution and has maintained that Congress could do pretty much as it pleased.

Under the Republican theory, which has prevailed during the last twenty-five years, Congress has reveled in a license of legislation never before attempted in the history of the Government. It has given away millions upon millions of acres of the public land—the people's heritage—in aid of private enterprises. It has loaned the credit of the National Government to the extent of over $50,000,000 to railroad corporations; it has appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars in aid of charity for the benefit of sufferers by flood and fire; it has spent thousands of dollars in establishing and maintaining a so-called national park at the headwaters of the Yellowstone River, the sole object of which was to benefit the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and to furnish a summer resort for European nabobs and American snobs [laughter], and not content even with this, it has been trying its hand at running a hotel down at the Hot Springs of Arkansas; and it seems that it does not know how to "run a hotel" either. If we are to believe the reports of gentlemen sent there in the last Congress as a special commission for the investigation of affairs at that point, it does not succeed even in that. [Laughter.]

It is time, Mr. Chairman, that we should put a stop to this system of legislation; and now I claim is the time. Let us commence this day and this hour by defeating the resolution now under consideration.

I would like to remind the House—and in particular this side of it—that we have now in the executive chair one who has declared "public office to be a public trust;" one who has never favored this kind of legislation, neither while acting as mayor of the city of Buffalo nor as governor of the great Empire State; and let me say, in conclusion, for I see the hammer is about to fall, that if this resolution becomes a law it will, in my opinion, only be after it shall have received a two-thirds vote of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time——

Mr. BEACH. I would like just a moment longer. [Cries of "Regular order!" and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for the consideration of this bill has expired, and under the rule the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of the sufferers by the overflow of the rivers in Alabama, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Thirty minutes of the hour for the consideration of bills still remain. The call is with the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TUCKER. As only thirty minutes remain of the hour for the consideration of bills I ask unanimous consent that the call of the Committee on the Judiciary be postponed until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to dispense with the remaining part of the hour for the consideration of bills for to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. OATES. I understood the request of the gentleman from Virginia was to postpone the call of the Judiciary Committee until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. But the Committee on the Judiciary has been called, and under the rules of the House must proceed now unless unanimous consent is given to dispense with the remaining part of the hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The remaining part of the hour is dispensed with.

CONTESTED ELECTION—CAMPBELL VS. WEAVER.

Mr. HALL. On Saturday I gave notice that the Committee on Elections would call up to-day the contested-election case of Campbell vs. Weaver, from the State of Iowa. I propose now to call up that case so as to enable the minority to give some explanation of their views as to proceeding to the disposition of the case.

Mr. PAYNE. Ths gentleman having charge of the river and harbor bill has requested us to postpone the consideration of this case and not call it up to-day. It would suit the convenience of the minority, if it is not called to-day, that it should be postponed until a week from to-morrow. We have made that suggestion to the majority of the committee, and I understand they accede to it.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to postpone the case till a particular day, because it is a matter of the highest privilege and can be called up any day.

Mr. PAYNE. We simply want that to be the understanding.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. WELLBORN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph under consideration and the amendment thereto.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving the harbor at Charleston, including Sullivan's Island, S. C.: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

The pending amendment was to strike out the last word.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the word before the last. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in replying to my remarks yesterday, entirely misapprehended or misstated my position. I certainly have drawn no sectional lines. If any sectional lines have been drawn, they have been drawn by the committee which reported this bill.

The gentleman from Ohio says that the reason why the appropriation should be much larger in the case of Charleston Harbor than in the case of Providence River and Narragansett Bay is because that locality in my own State has had the benefit of very large appropriations in the past, and Charleston Harbor has had very small appropriations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the gentleman will not take up my five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will give them to you if you can find any such utterance of mine in the RECORD, or anything that sounds like it, or anything that by any fair use of language can be tortured into it.

Mr. SPOONER. I call the gentleman's attention to it, for I certainly understood him to say so in his remarks yesterday.

The fact is that the appropriations which have been expended in the past in Charleston Harbor, as reported in the Engineer's Report, part 2, page 1181, amount to $1,197,732.08; whereas the amount that has heretofore been expended upon Providence River and Narragansett Bay in the improvement which has been there progressing amounts to but the sum of $416,805.83. I call the gentleman's attention to that as the record of the facts.

As illustrating to some extent the necessities of improvement of these two ports, in view of facts to which I have heretofore had occasion to refer, I desire to state that the amount of duties collected in the year 1884 at the port of Charleston, S. C., was only $36,624.76, while during the same year the amount of duties collected at the port of Providence was $201,977.87.

As I have said before, I am making no attack upon the harbor of Charleston. I am drawing no sectional lines, and desire to raise no sectional issues. But I do protest that if the rule of economy which was adopted toward all my section of the country is to be the rule in the framing of the river and harbor bill, the same rule should be adopted in other localities. I have no objection to a reasonable economy, in which all States bear their part. I do object to an economy which is to be imposed upon one section alone to the improper advantage of another section of the country.

Gentlemen tell me that 35 per cent. of the appropriation recommended for Providence River and Narragansett Bay has been allowed by the committee. They are mistaken in that statement. The amount recommended in the Engineer's Report for the improvement there going on and projected amounts to more than $200,000, of which the sum of but $35,000 has been provided in this bill. Gentlemen, put yourselves in our place, and ask yourselves if you would quietly submit to this same rule if applied to your own localities. For improving the harbor at Savannah, Ga., $125,000 is provided in this bill. For improving the harbor at Mobile, Ala., $120,000 is provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred." I am not making any factious opposition to this bill. I have no disposition to delay its consideration. I find myself in the position in which I understand many of my colleagues upon this floor find themselves, of being unable to vote for this bill in its present form. It is, therefore, manifestly my duty to submit such amendments with regard to these unreasonable and disproportionate appropriations as may give the committee and the House an opportunity of reducing the same and making this bill a legitimate and reasonable one, which can fairly and properly receive the favorable vote of the House—a bill which will commend itself to the good judgment not only of the House but of the country. I was referring a few moments ago to the appropriations in this expansive part of the bill where for improvements at Mobile, Ala., there is given $120,000; where the improvement of Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex., is given $135,000; where for the improvement of the harbor of Brazos Santiago, Tex., $50,000 are given; where for the improvement of the entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas, there is an appropriation provided of $400,000!

Compare these figures, gentlemen, with the scanty appropriations that have been given all along the North Atlantic coast. I know it is true of the North Atlantic coast that improvements made there are generally of a permanent character. The rocky nature of the coast, the hard nature of the land, facilitates the making of improvements which will be lasting; and the improvements in my own State have been of that character. On the southern coast, on the contrary, many of the so-called improvements have been far from permanent in character, and large appropriations of money have been asked and granted, nominally for the purpose of "continuing" improvements, but really in many cases for the purpose of replacing works that have been washed away, owing to the peculiarly sandy and shifting nature of the soil and coast. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in making the improvements called for by a bill of this character it should be the aim of Congress to provide for such improvements as will be of substantial benefit to existing commerce. I will not attempt at this stage of the discussion to enter into any extended comparison between the commercial necessities and commercial interests of the different sections of this country; but I do ask gentlemen to give their attention to the framework of this bill, and to assist me, if they can, in bringing it within such limits that it may be fairly entitled to our support.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall have a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. SPOONER, and it was rejected.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Improvement of entrance to Galveston Harbor, Texas: Continuing improvement, $400,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that paragraph. I want to again call the attention of the committee to the action of this House last year in considering the appropriation for this same work. I want to call attention to what was then said by Representatives from the State of Texas with regard to this improvement. And right here I want to correct a statement that was made by my friend from Texas [Mr. STEWART] when we were considering this bill the other day. I then understood him to say that the present plan of the engineers was substantially different from the plan upon which they were working at the time the improvement received the bitter denunciation of the Texas delegation. I want to correct the gentleman with regard to that. I had read the report bearing upon this subject and found that there was no difference whatever. I was then told by the gentleman [Mr. STEWART] that there was a supplemental report which sustained fully all that was said by that gentleman, but he is evidently mistaken.

Mr. Chairman, the plans of the engineers which they are working upon, or proposing to work upon, are substantially the same as those that were adopted in 1880 and that have been pursued from that time to this. There is an inconsiderable narrowing of the channel; there is a very considerable addition to the cost. Heretofore they have been using for the purposes of the south jetty mattresses of brush weighted with stone. Experience has shown that that material is not desirable. Certain members of the board say that the teredo attacks the brush in such a way as to render it unfit for use, and hence that they must use either stone or concrete, thus very largely increasing the cost; the stone costing $4 a cord, while the brush costs but $1 a cord.

I desire also to correct the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART] with regard to another point on which he has fallen into an error.

A year ago when we were discussing the plan of Captain Eads, when the gentlemen from Texas were advocating that plan, it was claimed, or it was estimated by him, that the cost would be seven and a half million dollars, although a gentleman in the other end of the Capitol added nearly a million dollars to that in his estimate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEWART] stated here that this plan would not cost so much. I want to call his attention to the estimate of the engineers, who say that it will cost $7,000,000. I wish the House to be in possession of these facts.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I adhere to the statement I made the other day. I say there have been material changes made by the supplemental report of the Chief of Engineers. In the project adopted some years ago the walls were to be parallel at a distance of 10,500 feet apart. By the recent report of the engineer they are to be contracted at their outer ends to 7,000 feet. One of the criticisms made upon this work before was that the walls were so far apart as not to give the scouring power necessary to deepen the bar.

Another change made in the report is, that instead of using brush mattresses as formerly, the engineer now proposes to use stone, which the gentleman says will increase the cost. That is admitted. But does the gentleman know that the Chief of Engineers now submits a plan to give 20 feet of water at a cost of $3,000,000, and to extend it further, so as to give 30 feet, at a cost of $7,000,000? There are two estimates made by the engineer. These changes which have been made by the engineer obviate I think the objections raised by those who opposed the work as it was carried on by the Government engineers. This is the statement I made the other day.

Now I call the attention of this House to the fact that there has been no appropriation for the improvement of Galveston Harbor since 1882; and I doubt whether there can be found another instance where a member representing a district in this House voluntarily surrendered an appropriation of $250,000 which had been reported for the improvement of the harbor of his city. I explained why that was done. I do not wish to occupy time now in repeating my former statements; but it was in consideration of these facts, doubtless, that the committee reported an increased appropriation in this bill.

I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to another fact: That the very least amount of money which can be profitably expended upon this work is stated by the engineer to be $320,000, although he says $1,000,000 can be profitably expended during the coming fiscal year.

I do not wish to go over ground that I traveled the other day. Galveston is one of the chief commercial ports, in fact the chief commercial port, upon our Texas coast. And I understand that coast does not belong exclusively to the State of Texas. Such an impression may have been entertained at one time, about which there was a little "unpleasantness," but I believe now we all concede it is part of this Government and within the jurisdiction of the United States; and although it happens to fall within the limits of the State of Texas, I trust no objection will be made to the improvement of this harbor upon the ground that it is so far south as the Mexican Gulf. That port is of commercial importance not only to the people of Texas but to the people of the entire Union. The products of that State are seeking an outlet. We have no other means of getting an outlet than by rail or by the improvement of our harbors on the Gulf coast; and why should this House deny us an appropriation which is but little more than the proportional amount allowed every other section of this Union?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would not have the gentleman from Texas suppose that I oppose this improvement solely because it lies within the State of Texas. I have no such feeling. But I know this means an expenditure of a good many millions of dollars. We are now just entering upon this work; for practically all that has been done for the harbor of Galveston up to this time has been a total loss. One of the piers erected is now buried in the sand; it has entirely disappeared as a factor in this improvement; the other one has sunk and been displaced by the elements, so that in very many places it is now 10 feet below the surface of the water. Practically the work already done amounts to nothing. We are, in fact, upon the verge of this improvement and upon the threshold of an expenditure, in my judgment, not of $7,000,000, but of three times that amount. I am justified in this statement; and I call upon gentlemen to look to the reports of the engineers, which sustain me. In almost every instance the gentlemen who make these estimates fall far below the real cost of the work.

This improvement is substantially the same as that which was so bitterly denounced in the last Congress, not merely by the gentleman who then represented the city of Galvestion, but by other gentlemen from the State of Texas, among whom notably was the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. REAGAN]. These gentlemen were as severe in their criticisms upon the plans which were then being carried out and upon the incapacity of the engineer then in charge and the one now in charge as was the Representative from Galveston. You then thought that these plans were an utter failure, and so declared. You now insist that substantially the same plans shall be carried out.

There is one other matter to which I want to call attention. This plan proposes an invasion of the Gulf from the shore line a distance of 54,000 feet—nearly 10 miles. You propose to go out upon the high seas, upon the highway of nations, a distance of 10 miles, 7 miles beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. What right have you to go there?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman take the ground that Galveston Harbor can not be improved by the expenditure of money by the General Government?

Mr. HEPBURN. I take the ground that Galveston Harbor can not be improved by the United States going out for that purpose 7 miles beyond the marine league, which is the limit of our jurisdiction.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, I will yield for a question.

Mr. CRAIN. Do you not know there are two jetties contemplated, and it is the aggregate length of the two that constitutes the 10 miles, and consequently they do not go out 7 miles?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know that. Then say it is 2 miles out.

Mr. CRAIN. Excuse me.

Mr. HEPBURN. What right have you to go out 2 miles?

Mr. CRAIN. You do not go out 2 miles. You commence in the harbor and you go out 5 miles from where you commence, and in going 5 miles you do not go out to sea 2 miles, as the gentleman alleges.

Mr. HEPBURN. In the engineer's report it is stated that you can not reach a depth of 30 feet until you get 7 miles from shore.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CRAIN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when this attack was made on the improvement contemplated for Galveston Harbor I happened to be absent from the Chamber, engaged in my labors as a member of the investigating committee on the strike in the Southwest. By accident I learned what was going on here, and now I rise in defense of the principal port on the coast of Texas and the most important city within that State.

But it is not Galveston alone which will be affected by this contemplated improvement. The city of Houston is just 50 miles by railroad from the city of Galveston. It has a population of about 30,000, while Galveston has a population of 40,000, making in all 70,000 people in the two cities. The assessed valuation of property in Houston and in Galveston amounts to nearly $40,000,000. There are several national banks and some forty-seven wholesale firms in Galveston, doing an annual business of $20,000,000.

But, sir, not only Galveston, and Houston, and the entire State of Texas demand a port on the coast of Texas, but nineteen States west of the Mississippi River demand it, the principal cities in which are nearer to Galveston than to New York by from 50 to 1,000 miles, respectively.

The city of San Francisco is 1,000 miles nearer to deep water outside of the city of Galveston than it is to the city of New York. There is an extensive area outside of Texas which is demanding an outlet for the products of its soil at the city of Galveston or somewhere along the Texas coast. The States embraced in that area constitute one-ninth of the entire population of the United States. They embrace one-seventh of the wealth of this country. They are interested in this problem.

Yet the gentleman says because it may cost $3,000,000, according to the Government engineers, to supply from 15 to 25 feet of water on the bar of Galveston, it is expending too much money. It is the first time, Mr. Chairman, I have ever heard a representative Republican complaining that this country was spending too much in public improvement.

He says, further, it costs the country too much if we obtain 30 feet of water at Galveston, because $7,000,000 may perforce be expended. If the results shall be what we have a right to expect, then the country can afford to spend five times $7,000,000 in order to give 30 feet of water upon the Galveston bar.

I say to the gentleman that Galveston Harbor has from 26 to 50 feet in what is known as Bolivar Channel. In front of Galveston you will find from 25 to 30 feet of water. Right in front of the wharves we have at least 30 feet of water.

But the gentleman says, what right have we to go 10 miles from shore—7 miles out to sea—a highway over which we have no control? If he will examine the chart of the city of Galveston and its vicinity, he will discover these jetties do not begin at the Gulf shore, but at what is called Bolivar Point, 4 miles inside the bar. Instead of there being 10 miles of one jetty, there are 10 miles of two jetties, each one being 5 miles in length.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon this amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I will state for the information of gentlemen that general leave has already been given several days ago to print upon this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon this amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. REAGAN. If debate is exhausted I will move a formal amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order; I submit that I was on the floor and was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of impression that no gentleman could speak but once upon a pending question until all others desiring to do so had had an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. HEPBURN. But I moved another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to propose the same formal amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. An amendment to strike out two words is different from an amendment to strike out one word. The moral effect is different. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the gentleman from Iowa proceeding now, and I will ask to be heard afterward.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to read a sentence or two from a report made at the other end of the Capitol, by a Senator from the State of Texas, upon the subject of the improvement of Galveston Harbor upon the Eads plans, in which he says:

> In view of the risk of injury to the works during their construction and of their failure to produce the stipulated depths, the committee is of opinion that 25 per cent. should be added to the total estimated cost to cover contingencies. This would amount to $1,791,960, which, added to the cost of the work, makes a total sum of $8,959,800.

Or nearly, Mr. Chairman, $9,000,000.

Now, sir, it is plain that this plan is substantially the Eads plan, except that there is not the same measure of contraction, although the length of the jetties is the same. They are more expensive than the Eads plan, because Eads proposed to use matresses made of brush, while this plan proposes to use concrete or stone, which would increase the cost of material at least fourfold. A Senator from the State of Texas then thought, last year, that this cost would be nearly $9,000,000, and I place his word against the gentleman who now represents more particularly Galveston.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CRAIN. You place it against the word of the engineers, or as against my word?

Mr. HEPBURN. I say the engineer puts the cost at $7,000,000. He says he can extend the jetties out to the crest of the bar at a cost of $3,000,000, but to go through that and get free access to deep water the cost will be $7,000,000. That is the engineer's report.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has told us that this is to be the entrepôt for one-ninth of the people of the United States. Why, sir, this is not the port for even Texas alone, and the commerce from Texas, a large part of it, passes right through the city of Houston and finds its way to the Atlantic seaboard at Boston.

Mr. CRAIN. That is because we have not deep water there. If we had it would not go through.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of what I said on this point during the last Congress with reference to the plans for this improvement. The gentleman from Iowa may be correct, but I do not remember having discussed the question at that time.

I state now, sir, that there are two objections to the plan then recommended by the Engineer Department; one that the jetties were too wide apart to produce the necessary scour of the bar, and another was developed by time showing that building submerged jetties allowed the water to flow over, producing a washing and destroying the works. I believe the construction of the jetties, making them above the surface of the water, was necessary to the successful improvement of the harbor or the channel there. We were influenced partly by that consideration, but more by the fact that the plan was submitted by Captain Eads, by which he proposed to give us 30 feet of water for seven and a half millions of dollars, and he proposed to make the payment of that work dependent upon the completion of the work itself.

The delegation from Texas were very anxious to secure the making of that contract, which we felt was best for the Government, best for Texas and all that extensive region of country to which Galveston and the Texas ports afford the only outlet to tide water. The gentleman then representing the district in which Galveston is situated feared that the asking of an appropriation for this work in the river and harbor bill would compromise the chance of securing the adoption of the plan proposed by Captain Eads and the acceptance of his proposition, and therefore he consented to ask that the appropriation be stricken out. That was the main reason, and not because of any doubt about the success of the work, but because it was believed that if the appropriation was named in the river and harbor bill it would show a divided opinion among those representing the interests of that State upon the question as to whether the plan proposed by Captain Eads or that presented by the Government engineers was to be preferred.

The question of deep water there is important, I think, to any one who understands the geography of this country, its conformation; to any one who understands that the Gulf extends far back from the general Atlantic-shore line, and that this port is brought nearer to one-half of this Union than any other seaport. It is material to any one who understands the embarrassments that now exist in Texas on account of the want of deep water—the necessities of our harbors, which open the gateway to the markets of the world for the Indian Territory, Kansas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, Western Arkansas, Missouri, and all this Western country. All will understand the vast importance of securing deep water there, and we come back to the problem which has been suggested as to whether a successful improvement of the harbor is possible.

I can not in five minutes go into a discussion of this question. I can only say the greatest living engineer in this or in any other country has been willing to stake his reputation as an engineer and the money necessary to complete the work on the successful obtaining of 30 feet of water in Galveston Harbor; and however much argument I might enter upon, not being an engineer, I could make no argument equal in force to that made by Captain Eads to give 30 feet of water for seven and a half millions of money.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraphs and amendments thereto be limited to five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CRAIN. I would like to know how much money the district which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has the honor to represent gets from this bill. Can the gentleman tell me?

Mr. HEPBURN. There is no navigable river in my district; and in Iowa we do not improve unnavigable rivers.

Mr. CRAIN. That is the milk in the cocoanut, undoubtedly. If the gentleman was getting a share of the pork we would hear no complaint from him. I asked him that question that I might make an attack on the appropriation for his district. He says he has nothing; and perhaps that is the reason why he assumes to attack every appropriation of any consequence in this bill.

The gentleman has charged on the Texas delegation that at the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress a motion was made by the Representative of Galveston to strike out the appropriation on the regular river and harbor bill of $250,000 for the benefit of Galveston Harbor. Instead of blaming the Texas delegation and the Galveston Representative for their action on that occasion he ought to have thanked them for their consistency, because they could not consistently take $250,000 in the river and harbor bill for a continuing improvement under the engineer's plan, which they then condemned, and at the same time ask for the passage of what was known as the Eads bill. The gentleman from Iowa also states that there is no difference between the plan now proposed by the Army engineers and the old plan and that the same engineer is retained in charge of the work. In that statement, with all due respect to him, he is mistaken.

The original plan contemplated, as was claimed by the engineer in charge of the Galveston work, one jetty—the south jetty. Subsequently that plan was changed so as to have a north jetty. In the language of Colonel Mansfield at Galveston, you might as well have a fiddle without a bow as a south jetty without a north jetty. It was claimed that about 18 feet of water were contemplated as the result of the original plan. Under the old plan mattresses were used. There was a layer of mattresses, then a deposit of stone; alternate layers of mattresses and stone. Those mattresses were subject to the action of the teredo, a marine animal about which doubtless the gentleman from Iowa knows nothing, as he has not even a navigable river in his State. The teredo preys on wood when put in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

Under the original plan the jetties were to be submerged; and as one of the results the water rushing over the top formed an excavation under the jetty and undermined it. And from the two causes, namely, the ravaging effects of the teredo and also the cut under the jetty, and from another cause, urged by General Newton, namely, that Galveston has not received a dollar of appropriation since 1882, and therefore the work has been exposed to the action of the elements, it is true, as reported by General Newton, Chief of Engineers, that 61 per cent. of the original work has gone.

This appropriation is not sought for the money, because Galveston put in $100,000 of her own money when the Government appropriation was exhausted and the engineer in charge said that he needed the money to carry on the work.

Under the new plan there are to be two jetties. Those jetties are to be built above low-water mark—in fact, they will be above high-water mark. They will be drawn more closely together and will be solid concrete and rubble, and a new engineer will be put in charge.

The differences, therefore, are in the distances apart of the jetties, in that the old ones were to be submerged and the new ones are to be built above water, and in the character of the material to be used; and, moreover, a new engineer is to be placed in charge of the work.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] suggests that I oppose this bill because I have no interest in it, because it contains no appropriations to Iowa; and he seems to be discontented with the fact that I oppose it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman really mean by that suggestion that no man has anything to do with this bill and no right to talk about it except those that have got interests in it, except those that have got appropriations for their own States, that have some of the pork in the barrel? I have some interest here as a Representative, although my district has no interest directly in this bill.

The gentleman suggests if there were appropriations for the State of Iowa I might favor this improvement. Is it because there are appropriations to the State of Texas that the gentleman favors the bill? Are his ideas of constitutional law, of constitutional power, and of the propriety of public expenditures dependent solely upon the local benefit that results to his own district, thus affecting his own popularity with his own constituents?

Mr. CRAIN. Do you want an answer?

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman does not do justice to himself when he makes that suggestion to me.

Mr. Chairman, this plan that is now being adopted—the plan of Eads and the old plan—were substantially alike. Each one of them contemplated a brace of jetties through which there was to be outflow and inflow from the bay, scouring out the bottom and securing a channel. The only difference in the plans is in the extent, the duration, the distance which the jetties are to be apart and the material of which constructed.

Mr. CRAIN. And above the water.

Mr. HEPBURN. The old plan was to be up to low tide, and no higher.

Mr. CRAIN. And the new one is to be above the water.

Mr. HEPBURN. This one is to be several feet above high tide.

Mr. CRAIN. That is a very material difference.

Mr. HEPBURN. Those are the differences. Gentlemen talk about the transcendent importance of the port of Galveston, and say that nineteen States are dependent upon it for their commerce. There never was a greater blunder made by a blunderer. There is not a shadow of truth in the statement. The port of Galveston does not even do the business of the State of Texas, does not even begin to do it.

Mr. CRAIN. Give us deep water, and she will.

Mr. HEPBURN. Besides, sir, there is but little commerce there. You do not raise wheat enough in the State of Texas to feed yourselves. The average consumption of wheat in the United States is 5 bushels per capita, and Texas has never raised more than 2½ bushels per capita. The average consumption of corn in the United States is 35 bushels per capita, and Texas has never raised that.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not the time. You talk about your cattle, your eight million cattle; and yet in 1883 you shipped from Galveston only about sixteen thousand dollars' worth. You have no cattle in Texas to ship; you have no corn-fed cattle; you have none that can bear shipment, and therefore you do not need a harbor for that. Leaving out five articles, your total imports at Galveston in 1883 did not reach $300,000 in value.

Mr. CRAIN. But the whole imports and exports were over $30,000,000, as shown by statistics.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; and the Government, if it loaned you this money that you want at 4 per cent., could take the interest, pay for shipping everything you have there to New Orleans by rail, and save $65,000 a year. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. HEPBURN, and there were—ayes 33, noes 82.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum voting.

Mr. WILLIS. I respectfully ask my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to withdraw the call for a quorum.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not want to be captious, but I want a vote upon this question. There are several amendments upon which we want a vote, and if you will give us a vote in the House I will withdraw the call.

Mr. WILLIS. I will agree to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to amend in line 235 of the bill by striking out "thirty thousand" and inserting "fifty thousand." I do not complain, Mr. Chairman, of the rule adopted by committee of apportioning the appropriations for the different items in the bill according to the estimates of the engineers. Some rule is doubtless necessary, and perhaps a better one could not be adopted. But there are exceptions to all rules, and it is manifest that such a rule could not be applied rigidly, or works would never be completed.

Take a work which requires $30,000 to complete it and make an appropriation of $10,000, and finally when it requires but $1,000 to complete it, if you appropriate only $333, and so on in successive years, it would require an application of the differential calculus to tell when the work would be completed. There must certainly be some stage in the prosecution of these works when their completion must be fully provided for. Furthermore, in carrying on these public improvements it is necessary at times to prosecute them in parts, and when a part of a given work, as for instance the construction of a lock, is undertaken, that part ought to be completed without delay, and that is this case. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a letter received from the Chief Engineer too late for presentation to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I ask for it the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, CUSTOM-HOUSE,
Cincinnati, April 15, 1886.

SIR: I see that the Muskingum ice-harbor gets but $30,000 in the proposed river and harbor bill.

It will be practically useless for us to commence work on the lower section of the lock unless there is a reasonable prospect of getting the structure above low water before we have to quit. To do this will require at least $55,000, as you can see from the following estimate, which is based on the one in my last annual report, although the latter was for entire completion:

Coffer-dam and pumping	$10,000
Excavation	2,500
Foundation piles and flooring	13,000
Concrete	8,000
Stone-cutting and masonry	15,000
Crib-work	1,000
Contingencies and emergencies	5,500
	55,000

Unless, therefore, the appropriation is raised to the sum named it is hardly worth while to attempt anything. We can probably get as far as the foundation flooring, but to leave this flooring over winter without weighting it down with concrete would be absurd.

Work like that at Marietta can not be expanded or contracted at will; unless a certain minimum is appropriated it is folly to go ahead at all, and these facts should be explained to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. E. MERRILL,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.

Hon. A. J. WARNER, M. C.,
Washington D. C.

That letter shows that this is one of the cases where when a work is undertaken a sum sufficient should be appropriated to finish it, to prevent the loss of the work or to save what has been expended.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, this work is two-thirds completed. The amount recommended by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will complete the coffer-dam and the foundation piles and flooring and also the concrete, and that is exactly within the terms of the requisition of the engineer.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But which the engineer says can not be left safely in that condition.

Mr. WILLIS. It can be left just as safely as any other part of the work. Of course it would be better to complete all these works at once if we had the money; but to do that would require a bill of $50,000,000. Having reference to the limited amount included in this bill, we have appropriated to this work, after careful examination of the facts, as much as we thought could be allowed in this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I recognize all that, Mr. Chairman; but this is not like the cases where much or little can be expended at discretion. That is the point I make.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Kewaunee, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $10,000; of which $5,000 shall be expended in improving the inner harbor between the dry-dock and the mouth of the river.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out all of the paragraph after the words "ten thousand dollars," was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Superior Bay and Saint Louis Bay, Wisconsin: Continuing improvement, $30,000; and the engineer in charge, in his next annual report, shall submit an estimate of the cost of a dredge-boat or other facilities that may be needed for dredging the harbors of Duluth and Superior. Eighteen thousand dollars of the money hereby appropriated are to be expended in dredging in said Superior Bay and Harbor and in repairing piers at natural entry, and $12,000 in dredging Saint Louis Bay from deep water at Connor's Point toward deep water at Grassy Point.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by inserting after the words "Saint Louis Bay," in lines 337 and 338, the words "along the dock line on the Wisconsin shore."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] whether any part of this appropriation is to be used in deepening the channel in the canal or at the mouth of the canal known as the Portage and Lake Superior Canal. I wish to know whether this appropriation refers to the point where that canal is located.

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman tell me whether there is any appropriation in this bill for that work?

Mr. WILLIS. There is not, so far as I know. It is a different matter from that now pending.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is it in the bill?

Mr. WILLIS. Not to my knowledge.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Sheboygan, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $15,000; of which $5,000 shall be expended in improving the inner harbor between Pennsylvania avenue bridge and the mouth of the river.

The amendment reported from the committee to strike from the paragraph all after the words "fifteen thousand dollars" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn.: Continuing improvement, also enlarging basin between Minnesota and Rice's Points, $50,000; and the consent of the United States is hereby given to a change of the legal dock line on the east side of Rice's Point by the municipal authorities of Duluth.

The amendments reported by the committee were to make the paragraph read as follows:

Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn.: Continuing improvement and enlarging basin between Minnesota and Rice's Points, $50,000; and the consent of the United States is hereby given to a change of the existing dock line on the east side of Rice's Point by the municipal authorities of Duluth: Provided, That such change meets the approval of the Secretary of War.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Agate Bay, Minnesota: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

The amendment of the committee to strike out the words "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $100,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause suit to be instituted for the condemnation of the 12 acres of land said to be necessary to said improvement, and to report the result of such legal proceedings to the next succeeding session of Congress for its action thereon.

The amendment of the committee to insert after the words "hereby authorized" the words "at his discretion" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $80,000.

The amendment of the committee was to insert the following after the paragraph just read:

The sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for a survey of San Francisco Harbor, San Pablo Bay, Suisun Bay, Strait of Carquinez, mouth of San Joaquin River, and mouth of Sacramento River, California, to be used by the Chief of Engineers and the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. MARKHAM. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "30," in line 371, and inserting "11," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $11,000; and also to strike out at the end of the amendment the words "and the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

Mr. WILLIS. I will state that since the report first made to this House a supplementary report has been made by the same officer revising his estimate, and upon a review of the situation reducing the amount from $30,000 to $11,000. It is upon this supplementary report which has just come in that my colleague on the committee offers this amendment. The committee have no objection to it.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. MARKHAM] that the second branch of his amendment should strike out "to be used by the Chief of Engineers and the Coast and Geodetic Survey." The words "be used by the Chief of Engineers" would be surplusage if the amendment as proposed by the gentleman should be adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. In other words, all this will be used by the Chief of Engineers unless otherwise designated.

Mr. MARKHAM. I modify my amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MARKHAM as modified, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Saco River, Maine: Continuing improvement, $12,500.

The amendment of the committee striking out the words "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Narragaugus River, Maine: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment of the committee striking out the words "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

Mr. HAYNES. I move the following amendment:

Improving Cocheco River, New Hampshire: Completing improvement, $19,000

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope no member of this House will assume that I have any idea this amendment will pass. [Laughter.] I am very well aware by the course of events that this river and harbor bill is the great white elephant of this House. It has been curried, rubbed down, and polished by the members of the committee, and the rest of us are expected to fall down and worship it from afar off, and to admire its just proportions according to the amount of pork we have in the Government barrel. [Renewed laughter.] If it had been like other bills, open to amendment early in its consideration, I would have moved to increase the paltry sum of $8,000 provided in the bill for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Portsmouth, N. H., to a sum sufficient for that important work. I find the other water way in my bailiwick has been treated even more shabbily than Portsmouth. So far as the Cocheco River is concerned, the bottom of it appears to have dropped out and it disappears from the bill altogether.

I am told the improvement of the Cocheco River was not included in the Book of Estimates at all. Furthermore, it has been said that in some paper, which the committee had before it, I suppose, it was reported as a work which had already been completed. Well, in regard to the first proposition, I have only to say that over $1,000,000 of the fifteen millions included in this bill are for items not covered by the Book of Estimates. And to show whether the improvement of the Cocheco River has been completed or not, I desire to read an extract from the report of Colonel Blount, which will explain the matter. It will be found on page 475 of the Chief of Engineers' Report:

An appropriation of $28,000 was made in the act of July 5, 1884, for "completing the improvement" of the river. As soon as possible after it became available a careful examination, including borings, was made of the upper channel. The new estimate based thereon proved that the necessary improvement could not be executed with the available funds. Contract was, therefore, made September 22, 1884, with Thomas Symonds, of Leominster, Mass. (a very reliable and competent contractor), for widening and deepening the channel from the point where the work of 1883 stopped as far toward the city as possible. The line (36) limiting this work is shown on the drawing which accompanies this report.

Then, further down, he says:

On the 18th of February, 1885, I submitted to the Engineer Department a special report on the improvement of this river, from which I make the following extracts:

* * * "It was found that the improvement asked for could only be carried to a line just below Collins's wharf, leaving the upper part of the channel to Packet Landing, its termination, untouched. Of course the additional depth and width which will be gained when the contractor has finished will be of little advantage unless they are continued up through the whole channel above."

The whole situation is this: That the work of opening up the Cocheco River to Dover has been conducted by sections. They have arrived at what is in fact the bulkhead of the work, and $19,000 is asked to complete the work in order to open up the channel and make what has been done practicable and of some value. That appropriation has been omitted from the bill, and the work, unless my amendment be adopted, will necessarily be suspended.

Mr. BAYNE. I have only a word to say, Mr. Chairman. My friend from New Hampshire is entirely mistaken in assuming there is a single, solitary appropriation in this bill which has not come with the recommendation of the War Department. It may not be they were all included in the estimates for this year, but came at different times. The Book of Estimates sets forth the bulk of them, while in other documents the others will be found to have been recommended by the Engineer Corps. There is not a solitary appropriation in the bill which has not the sanction, I believe, of the War Department as well as of the Engineer Corps. I know my friend would not intentionally state the fact to be otherwise if he knew the real facts of the case.

Mr. HAYNES. I would say nothing can be plainer than the recommendation of the Engineer Corps in favor of Cocheco River, which I have read. It is my opinion, and the opinion of the engineer who made the survey, this work should be done.

Mr. MARKHAM. There are a great many recommendations made by the Engineer Corps which are not included; but of those which are included there is not one which has not been recommended by the War Department.

Mr. BAYNE. Many we did not include which were recommended, but none were included which were not recommended.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Have the committee any knowledge of any objection to granting the appropriation asked for?

Mr. BAYNE. I know nothing about the improvement at all. I do not recall the matter, and my only object in rising was to correct the statement of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in response to my very amiable friend from New Hampshire I desire to say that the committee in the last Congress exhibited its inclination most especially to take care of the Cocheco River, for which he now asks this additional appropriation. It is about the only river in the United States that the committee has yet completed.

Upon the official statement of the Chief of Engineers last year we appropriated $28,000 for the completion of this river. That was the full amount asked, while in every other portion of the country we were compelled, because of the small size of the bill, to give 10, 20, or 25 per cent. of the estimates; but for this Cocheco River our desire was so great we gave every dollar that was asked for, and the river was completed and laid away and we did not expect ever to hear of it again; the engineer never brought it to our attention in this Congress. We not only completed it, but we gave it a new channel to run in. Out of this $28,000 a part was expended in making a cut-off through Alley's Point—

Avoiding an inconvenient bend and in deepening and in widening adjacent parts of the channel—

As the engineer in charge reports.

There is no further recommendation from the Chief of Engineers for this river, and there is yet $10,000 unexpended on hand. These are the special reasons why we took no further action in that case.

The amendment proposed by Mr. HAYNES was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ipswich River, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement, $2,500.
Improving Warren River, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

The committee recommend the striking out of the words "Continuing improvement."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know why the committee makes this recommendation.

Mr. WILLIS. For the reason that this is new work. It has never been appropriated for before, and hence it was not a continuing appropriation.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $35,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 417, the words "thirty-five" and insert "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. SPOONER. As it seems to be impossible, by the reduction of what seems to me to be a very large appropriation, to somewhat equalize the appropriations given to different localities by this bill, I propose to submit to the committee the opportunity of attempting the equalization to some extent in the other directions.

I have, therefore, moved to increase the appropriation provided for by this bill for the improvement of Providence River and Narragansett Bay by providing that $100,000 shall be appropriated for that purpose. This is a less amount, as I have already had occasion to call to the attention of the committee, than is provided for the harbors at Charleston, Mobile, Savannah, and several others which I have particularized, neither of which have commercial necessities, nor are they of as much commercial importance, as this river and harbor.

This is the great harbor not only of my own important State, but also of the great central portion of New England, to which it is a conduit. The amount that is required, according to the report of the engineers, for the completion of the work, which has been under way, of widening and deepening the channel, is $235,000. In addition to that the engineer has reported the necessity of an appropriation for the removal of what is known as Green Jacket shoal, in the harbor of $112,346.25, which is the estimate placed upon it. The engineer says:

The major part of the larger class of vessels engaged in the commerce of Providence are from 16 feet to 20 feet draught, and there is a constant tendency to an increase in the size of vessels arriving at this port and a corresponding reduction in the cost of freights. There are several vessels already that draw more than 20 feet, and the number would be larger, but at present there is no anchorage for such vessels, except in such positions that they rest in the mud at low water or they occupy and obstruct our newly excavated 25-foot channel, the upper end of which lies just west of the shoal, and the whole of which is nearly completed to the deep water of Narragansett Bay.

When, at low water, these vessels rest in the mud near the channel, they crush down its banks, and our recent surveys show that much damage has been done to the channel in this way.

In consideration of these facts and the comparative economy of making the whole depth in one contract, it will doubtless be advisable to dredge the shoal at once to the depth of 25 feet at mean low water.

I have but a few words more which I wish to say in this connection. This is no unimportant harbor; it has no unimportant commercial interests that are to be provided for. The works of improvement which have been progressing, and which I hope may progress still further until they are completed, do not provide for a problematical commerce in the future, but they do provide for a commerce which is existing to-day and is seeking facilities there to-day.

By the report from the custom-house there were in the year 1884 (arrivals and departures from that port) 11,948 vessels, with a total tonnage of 3,907,146 tons.

These figures do not convey very much of an idea to any one who does not compare them with the figures of the same character relating to the other harbors with which I have been attempting to draw some comparison, in order that the legitimacy of this appropriation which I now seek may be fairly estimated. The revenue collected in the district of Providence from customs in the fiscal year last past was $201,977.87, and yet our foreign commerce is but a trifle as compared with our immense domestic commerce seeking facilities in that port.

The removal of this Green Jacket shoal is an important matter, as is stated clearly by the engineer in what I have already read from his report. I ask that this river and harbor in my own State, not a matter of local interest alone but a matter of national interest and importance, may receive some consideration commensurate with its importance and necessities. I ask that the amendment may be adopted. I ask that we may be put on something like an equality with gentlemen who, by reason of being members of the committee or otherwise, have obtained in other sections of the country much larger appropriations than I now seek for objects of much less importance and worth.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to say only a word as to this amendment. This river is 7 miles in length. Up to the present time it has had appropriations of $60,000 for each mile. In 1882 there was an improved plan adopted, and that plan is nearly completed; so that the facilities for commerce are as fully extended at that point as at any point in this bill. There is now a channel from 200 to 300 feet wide and from 25 to 27 feet in depth, being the full amount of what is called for by the plan. There is therefore no emergency. Notwithstanding that, the committee have given, upon a recommendation of $100,000, an appropriation of $35,000, which is more than four-fifths of what the other points receive. The committee, therefore, has not declined to recognize the importance of this place, but has fully recognized it, and has given as much as could be given within the limits of this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the committee has not entirely passed over without recognition the matter of the removal of Green Jacket shoal.

Mr. WILLIS. I was about to come to that. The matter of the removal of Green Jacket shoal is now pending, and is not reported upon by the Chief of Engineers. It is not, therefore, on the Book of Estimates. I presume, in the coming year, the engineer will examine the report and put it on the Book of Estimates. It will then be before the committee, and I have no doubt it will receive the same liberal treatment that has been given to the river.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SPOONER, there were—ayes 39, noes 64.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the following:

Improving Pawcatuck River, Rhode Island: Continuing improvement, $12,000.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

Strike out the words "Continuing improvement."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving narrows at Lake Champlain, New York, from Benson, Vt., to canal locks at Whitehall, N. Y., $40,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky for an explanation as to this appropriation of $40,000 for improving narrows at Lake Champlain, New York. I find the appropriation here made is 80 per cent. of the estimate of the engineer. I would like to be informed by the gentleman from Kentucky why this variation is made from the rule which I understand the committee has adopted. I notice also that for the Newtown Creek improvement there is an allowance of 50 per cent. of the estimate. At East Chester Creek there is an allowance of 50 per cent. on the estimate of the engineer. In the case of many other important improvements there is a much less ratio than that. I should like to have an explanation.

Mr. WILLIS. As I undertook to state in my opening remarks on this bill in the general debate the committee adopted no cast-iron rule in regard to the amounts to be allotted to these improvements. We did not think medicine that would be necessary for a child would have any effect on a giant. When we found a place like Newtown Creek, with a commerce of twenty or thirty millions, we thought in the public interest a larger amount should be given because a larger amount of commerce would be benefited. The same remark applies to the appropriation for East Chester Creek, which carries a commerce of five and a half millions of dollars, and also to the narrows of Lake Champlain.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am not familiar with the relative commerce of Providence and the commerce of these two creeks; but I understand the appropriation for Providence River, of which the gentleman from Rhode Island has just spoken, is 25 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman from Kansas will examine the report he will find in one case the amount is $200,000 and in the other five and one-half million dollars. Therefore the reason for the difference will suggest itself at once.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Passaic River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $35,000; of which $3,000 are to be used above Newark.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$35,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, the sum of $35,000 is insufficient to make such an improvement of the Passaic River as the commerce of that river demands. I ask to have read as part of my remarks an extract from the engineer's report.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMPROVEMENT OF PASSAIC RIVER, BELOW NEWARK, AND REMOVING SHOALS IN NEWARK BAY, NEW JERSEY.

The project of this improvement was adopted in 1880, and provides for the formation and maintenance, by means of dredging and a system of training-dikes, of a channel 200 feet in width and 10 feet in depth at mean low water from the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge, Center street, Newark, to Newark Bay, the original navigable depth being 7½ feet at mean low water. The range of tides at Newark is 4.7 feet, approximately. The project was revised in 1884, so as to extend the improvement southward into Newark Bay by the construction of 8,000 feet of diking in extension of the existing dike at the mouth of the river and the opening of a channel 2,000 feet long, 200 feet wide, and 10 feet deep, low stage, through the shoal in Newark Bay, abreast of Passaic Light. Up to June 30, 1884, the amount expended on the project was $122,991.47.

Sealed proposals, invited by public advertisement, were opened September 17, 1884, and the contract was awarded to Messrs. H. Du Bois's Sons, the lowest bidders, for building 700 feet, more or less, of diking in Newark Bay, at $18 per linear foot, and for dredging 70,000 cubic yards, more or less, of material from the bay, at 10 cents per cubic yard. Work under the contract was begun November 13, 1884, and by the 15th of May, 1885, 699 feet of the diking were completed and filled with stone, making the aggregate length of the dike extending from the mouth of the river into Newark Bay, abreast of Elbow Beacon, 4,705 feet.

Work under the contract for dredging was extended to September 1, 1885. Up to June 30, 1885, 34,509 cubic yards of material were removed from the shoal in Newark Bay immediately south and east of Passaic Light, making the channel 2,000 feet long, 100 feet wide, and 10 feet deep, mean low water. All the material removed will be deposited behind the dike. The dike, at a point about 2,000 feet from the shore end, was injured by ice-jams early in the spring of 1885. The repairs, which will be made under a written agreement with the present contractors, will include 6,000 feet B. M. of oak sheathing, furnishing and driving 50 piles, putting into place and bolting 250 piles, replacing 800 feet B. M. of pine walling timbers, and supplying 400 cubic yards of stone.

The commerce of the river is now so large that it has been found imperative to provide 10 feet depth, mean low water, in a narrow channel, as early as possible, from the lower Newark Bay to the city wharves at Newark.

The small appropriations available have not been sufficient to give everywhere the full channel width of 200 feet required by the project, nor to begin any of the diking projected for the protection of the banks or the contraction of the channel, except at the entrance. The small width of 100 feet to which the channel has necessarily been limited in places has caused a slight deterioration of depths by the leveling and wearing of the banks of the cuts, which would have been avoided had the cuts been made wider, and the total cost of execution of the original project would have been reduced. Now that 10 feet at low stage can be carried to the city, it will be advisable to begin some of the dike-work for the better maintenance of the improved channel.

The dike at the entrance should be extended south through Newark Bay, beyond Passaic Light, a distance of 4,000 feet, and northward at the shore end, by a light structure to protect the banks, for a distance of 1,000 feet. Four thousand feet of the dike projected for the left bank between zinc works and the toll bridge (page 537, Annual Report Chief of Engineers, 1880, part I), opposite Point no Point, should also be built, and the channel along its front should be widened 50 feet and deepened 2 or 3 feet. The estimated cost of these necessary improvements is $125,000.

An appropriation of $125,000 is recommended. The river is used principally by vessels drawing over 10 feet. Twenty-two thousand vessels passed the draw of the New York and Newark Railroad bridge during the year. The city of Newark has a population of over 150,000 souls, 1,400 manufacturing establishments, employing 40,000 hands, and the total annual product of the diversified industries is estimated at $70,000,000.

Mr. PHELPS. I suppose no member fails to think that his river or harbor is the most important in this sacred book; that no one fails to wonder at the harsh treatment his interests have received at the hands of the committee. And this is my belief, and I ask the committee to listen to the reasons for it. The city of Newark has 150,000 inhabitants, all at work except those who are in the cradle or the grave. There are fourteen hundred large factories, and in them or about them labor forty thousand workmen every day. Most of them may be Knights of Labor. If they are, I hope they are watching the votes of Representatives here to-day. This hive of industry gives to commerce every year seventy million dollars' worth of a varied industry. But this vast trade and commerce call for better accommodations. Newark lies on the banks of the Passaic, three or four miles from Newark Bay. The river is broad, but its channel is narrow. Up and down this river passed last year twenty-two thousand vessels. They have to pass each other painfully and slowly, as in a canal. A canal may be picturesque, but it is not fitted for a business like this.

The Chief Engineer proposes to make it a practicable water way. He says for $125,000 he will make it 200 feet wide and 10 feet deep. It ought to be done. This committee ought to vote the appropriation.

I ask it not for this State or this city only. I ask it for a general commerce. Maine brings ice and lumber, North Carolina tar and turpentine, Louisiana sugar, and Georgia and the Carolinas their cotton. The captains of all these vessels will approve the increased appropriation, and I hope the amendment will carry.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] challenged me yesterday to be consistent in discussing this bill when I came to the appropriations for New Jersey. I have carefully examined the bill, and find I am unable to find a provision for the improvement of any river in the State of New Jersey the improvement of which would not be perfectly constitutional and legitimate. I find, moreover, so far as the State of New Jersey is concerned, that while the engineer asked for twenty-seven different specific improvements in that State, the committee have appropriated for only seven. In so far as I have investigated, I can not see but what the State of New Jersey has got less from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, taking into consideration the report of the engineers, than any other State represented on this floor. Why, Mr. Chairman, the engineers of the Government asked that over $4,500,000 should be expended in the improvement of the rivers and harbors of that State, and the committee have recommended the appropriation of only $88,000.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Does not the gentleman know——

Mr. MCADOO. I am not complaining about it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. MCADOO. No, I can not yield; my time is too limited. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining, for I say to the House and to the gentleman from Maryland, after reading the report of the engineers, that there are a number of items there which, if they had been put in the bill, I would have voted against, because they would not be legitimate constitutional improvements for which this House would have a right to expend the people's money.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman allow me to remind him that those appropriations were taken out of this bill upon the request and with the advice of the New Jersey delegation in the last House, and upon the report of the engineer stating that they ought not to be made?

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I have stated that I am not complaining of the action of the committee. I have said, and I repeat, that so far as some of those items are concerned the committee did what was right and just. Those items ought not to be in the bill, and the House would have no right to take the people's money and put it into the improvement of those creeks. But, Mr. Chairman, I say, on the other hand, that the State of New Jersey has been extremely modest, and has been provided for in an extremely modest manner in this bill. I have examined four or five items of appropriation for her benefit, and if any one of them comes under the inhibition of the Constitution as expounded by Chief-Justice Marshall in the famous case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, the great steamboat case, in which he laid down the doctrine of the rights of the United States in regard to the internal commerce of the States in this language:

> The genius and character of the whole Government seem to be that its action is to be applied to all the external concerns of the nation, and to those internal concerns which affect the States generally, but not to those which are completely within a particular State, which do not affect other States, and in which it is not necessary to interfere for the purpose of executing some of the general powers of the Government.

The completely internal commerce of a State, then, may be considered as reserved for the State itself. Now that does not apply to this stream, the appropriation for which my colleague is endeavoring to have increased. This is an interstate stream, as much as the Mississippi River—the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] smiles—ay, more than the great roaring Kanawha [laughter], and it is perfectly legitimate, under the Constitution of the United States, that this stream should be improved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the business aspect of the matter: It is one of my principal objections to this bill for rivers and harbors that we do not proceed with it as a business concern would do. What is the use of every two years taking a certain amount of money and putting it into the improvement of a stream and then waiting until the stream has washed that away before we make any further appropriation? If the improvement is legitimate, if it is called for, if the Constitution authorizes it, if the Congress of the United States should make it, then we should make an honest appropriation to make the improvement and carry it to completion. This dribbling of appropriations from year to year is simply stealing the people's money, wasting it, and giving them no benefit.

Mr. WILLIS. The commercial importance of this river is fully recognized, I presume, by every one who knows anything at all about it. Having considered the condition of the river and the recommendation in regard to it, we have reported this appropriation of $32,000. Now, the Committee of the Whole must bear in mind that this a very short river; that the part of the river for which we propose to give $32,000 is only 2 or 3 miles long. I am informed by a friend in front of me that it is 3 miles long. Now, we are proposing in this bill to give for these 3 miles an appropriation of $10,000 a mile.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman will allow me to say that the part of the river which is to be improved by this appropriation of $32,000 is over 6 miles long.

Mr. WILLIS. My friend corrects me by stating that the portion of the river to which the bulk of this appropriation is to be applied is 6 miles long. Grant it. What other river in the United States receives in this bill that much per mile? It is a short river. True, its commerce is important; and the Government has heretofore very properly been liberal in appropriating for it. In this bill we have done the best we could for this river. The bill is now larger than some of my friends from New Jersey think it ought to be. Taking into consideration the limitation upon the appropriations in the bill, and considering also the shortness of this river, the committee has done the very best it could.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LEHLBACH, it was rejected; there being—ayes 41, noes 67.

Mr. HIRES. I move to amend by striking out in line 447 the word "five" and inserting "ten;" so as to make the appropriation for the improvement of Maurice River, New Jersey, $10,000.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I rise to a point of order, that the paragraph to which this amendment relates has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WELLBORN). The Chair will state that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HIRES] endeavored to obtain recognition from the Chair at the proper time, but through inadvertence the Chair did not recognize him, and now accords him the recognition to which he is fairly entitled. The question is on the amendment as stated by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HIRES. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment I desire to say that Maurice River is a considerable stream, about 24 miles in length. On either side of it are several thriving towns, and at its head is the city of Millville, one of the most thriving cities in the State of New Jersey, having a population of ten or twelve thousand. Some of the largest manufacturing establishments in our State are at Millville, and the largest glass manufacturing establishment in the United States is located there. Besides the trade which the towns on this river naturally bring to it, there are large deposits of sand, which are now being shipped to all parts of the Eastern and Middle States.

The engineers in their report state that $35,000 could be profitably expended on this improvement during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887. I sincerely hope that the Committee of the Whole will grant the amount asked in this amendment, which I consider but a pittance at best.

Mr. WILLIS. The amount of money on hand, unexpended, for this river is in round numbers $19,000. This is one of the reasons why the committee did not give more.

Mr. HIRES. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say that the amount estimated to complete this work is $92,000.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HIRES, it was rejected; there being—ayes 38, noes 52.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the clause relating to the improvement of the Hudson River, having been called out of the House at the time that paragraph was reached.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope consent will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SWINBURNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> After the word "dollars," in line 421, insert "and $40,000 for the removal of the rock in the channel at Van Wie's Point."

Mr. SWINBURNE. Mr. Chairman, in asking to have this amount for continuing improvements on the Hudson River increased and this additional $40,000 appropriated it can not be said that it is for any local interest, but rather for the benefit of a vast country lying north, east, and west of the State of New York, as well as the State itself. The State of New York, at a cost of $51,609,200 for construction, has opened and thrown free to commerce one of the greatest interior water ways in the world, and for the purpose of keeping this channel between the lakes and the navigable outlet to the ocean in proper condition expended in 1884 for ordinary repairs and operating expenses the sum of $718,-325.66.

This connecting link between the vast producing western section of the country and the avenues of trade with all the nations of the world empties a traffic in commerce on the Hudson River which makes that river the greatest inland commercial water way in the nation, and demands at least a generous recognition by the General Government to keep it free from interruption to all legitimate navigation. The 460 miles of canals, with over a hundred locks, besides feeders and branches, connecting the Hudson River with Lake Champlain and the vast territories of Canada and the States bordering the lakes and tapping the Grand Trunk Railway at Oswego with the West and the trade of the St. Lawrence River and the Reque Canal, and at Buffalo with Lake Erie and the chain of lakes in the West, are far-reaching in resources and important in commercial interests.

Over these canals during the ten years, including 1884, 14,280,727 tons of merchandise, valued at $1,732,879,725, were carried; a very large proportion of this amount going and coming from New York by the Hudson River. Over these canals in 1884 the value of the merchandise transported was $162,097,069. Of this amount $53,551,968 was from the West and went direct to New York. In four of the staple articles of the West—wheat, rye, corn, and barley—thus transported, the value represented was $27,215,055.

For the year 1885 there were carried over these canals 4,731,784 tons of merchandise, of which 3,476,134 tons went East and 1,255,650 tons West, the total value of merchandise and property thus moved aggregating $119,536,189. The property arriving at tide water during the year from the West amounted to 2,715,219 tons, while the total value of all property arriving at tide water from the canals was $55,130,473; the value of property left in the city of New York being $49,955,934.

These canals are the great natural outlet for the immense trade of the West, and during the season the boats engaged on the canal carry a third of all the cereals shipped from the West to New York during the year. It is a means of reducing the rates of transportation and preventing exorbitant charges, and thus materially assisting in placing the produce of the West on foreign markets at greatly reduced prices and directly benefiting the Western producer. The people of New York have made this water way free to all commerce passing over it at an annual expense of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and propose to render it still more useful and profitable to commerce and a valuable means of transporting vessels of war to the Western lakes in the emergencies arising from war, and it is nothing more than a proper recognition of these facts that Government should be just, if not liberal, in fostering the trade of so important an outlet from our vast grain fields and stock-raising industries to the ocean.

The reshipments from the port of Albany last year were:

	Value.
Grain, 1,800,000 bushels	$10,500,000
Lumber, 500,000,000 feet	10,000,000
Coal (received) 300,000 tons	1,125,000

The miscellaneous freight received and shipped by steamer was 260,000 tons.

All this trade leaves the canals at and in the neighborhood of Albany, and during some seasons of the year meet with more obstructions in the Hudson River than in the canals. Between the mouth of the canal and New York city the State of New York expends large amounts of money to keep an open channel, and appropriates to that end $30,000 annually. As much of this sum as is necessary is expended in dredging and in keeping open the channel in the river, but at Van Wie's Point, a short distance below Albany, a ledge of rocks extends out into the channel, and during the season of low tide an embargo is almost sure to take place. At this point numerous vessels have been compelled to stop and unload at a great cost in money and sacrifice in time. There is no plausible reason why the Government should not remove this permanent obstruction to trade as well as prevent the annoyances of delay to passenger steamers.

This obstruction at Van Wie's Point (Austin's Rock) is a ledge of rocks extending out into the channel, and to render the channel safe and open will require the removal of about 1,200 yards of rock. This, because of the interruptions that must unavoidably occur through the narrowness of the channel in allowing steamers and other vessels to pass up, can not be safely undertaken at a lower figure than $30 per yard.

This ledge is a continual cause of expense to the State of New York in causing the lodging and forming of sand bars in the spring of the year. It is, in addition, an important factor in assisting the ice gorges that make at this point on the breaking up of the ice in the Upper Hudson and its tributaries every year, causing a backing of water, overflowing the docks, piers, and lands on both sides of the river several feet deep. The least deviation from the center of the channel during the season of low water is often attended with the grounding of the steamer or canal-boat and an interruption of trade.

From Southern and Eastern ports there is a regular trade in sailing vessels in this channel, and to the owners of vessels who do not feel like employing tugs to tow the passage is always dangerous.

In addition to the regular commerce over the canals the heavy freight and passenger transportation is carried on by steamers navigating this river and passing this point to Albany and Troy, where several lines of railways for the East, North, and West center, and from which points a large distributing trade is carried on by the railways.

The appropriation asked for by the committee will effect but slight relief and will require to be repeated from year to year. This may and can be obviated by the appropriating of $40,000.

This additional appropriation is asked for with more than ordinary confidence, because it is in reality a reform, and because it is recommended by General Newton, the head of the Engineer Corps of the War Department, who understands the necessity for having this bar (Austin's Rock) removed, and has recommended $35,000 for the purpose. In his report he states the fact, known to every person conversant with the Upper Hudson River, that it has always been obstructed by bars and shoals, due to the existence of numerous islands and sloughs. The other $15,000 recommended by the committee will be required in other improvements in the 20 miles of channel between Troy and New Baltimore. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLEIGH. In reply to the remarks of my colleague [Mr. SWINBURNE] I will state that $15,000 was appropriated for the place referred to, and the last report showed the sum of $31,000 to be on hand, making a little more than the full amount which the engineer stated to be necessary—$45,000. I presume my colleague did not understand this to be the fact, but it is.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SWINBURNE, it was rejected; there being—ayes 65, noes 75.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to inquire of the Chair whether the rule which prohibits smoking in the body of the House applies also to the galleries. If it does, I should like the gentleman near that end [indicating] to quit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the grievance is corrected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate for the purchase of the works of the Monongahela Navigation Company, situated in the Monongahela River, in the States of Pennsylvania and West Virginia; and in order to ascertain the value of said works the Secretary of War shall appoint a commission of three competent engineers from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, who shall value and appraise the same and report to the Secretary of War. And if the said Monongahela Navigation Company shall offer and bind itself to take for said works a price deemed by the Secretary of War to be satisfactory and not excessive, he shall so report to the Congress at its next succeeding session; but if the said Monongahela Navigation Company refuses to sell its works, or demands a price therefor deemed to be excessive, then the Secretary of War shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire said works by condemnation for the United States; or, in the exercise of his discretion, the Secretary of War may, and he is hereby authorized to, take possession of said works in the name of the United States, to the end that the navigation of said Monongahela River may become free and said works be brought within the provisions of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved 5th day of July, 1884. And for the purpose of carrying into effect these provisions the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on the warrant of the Secretary of War.

Amendment of the committee: Insert before the word "the" the following:

Improving Monongahela River, Pennsylvania and West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $121,200; and.

Mr. REAGAN, Mr. WILLIS, and others sought the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has extended recognition to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY], who wishes to raise a point of order upon the paragraph in the bill which has been read.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask by unanimous consent general debate on this paragraph be limited to half an hour.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am satisfied when you have considered the point of order which I will raise it will dispose of the whole question.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well; then I will reserve that request until after the gentleman's point of order has been stated.

Mr. NEGLEY, Mr. Chairman: First, because this provision is extraordinary in its scope, unconstitutional, and without precedent.

Second. Congress has not the power to refer a constitutional function to a subordinate officer of the Government, wherein it is proposed to seize a State franchise, the rights of a corporation, and property without observing all the requirements of law.

Third. That no expenditure can be legally made by the Government upon any public improvement until the State in which this improvement is situated gives a general cession of jurisdiction over the lands in question.

Fourth. This is not an improvement of the Monongahela River, but the purchase by the Government of an improvement already existing.

Fifth. There has been no report or recommendation received from the Department having charge of the interests of navigation upon which to base an estimate of the cost of this property.

Sixth. That it would not be an exercise of prudent judgment on the part of the members of this House, or in keeping with a wise policy, to incur a large indebtedness, and, at the same time, create a long and expensive litigation.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to antagonize the demand for the unobstructed navigation of the Monongahela River, and I advocate that it should be made free of all taxation or impositions upon commerce, but we should proceed orderly, with a full knowledge of all the facts. We not only should conform with the requirements of the statutes bearing on the question of the right of eminent domain, but not attempt to confiscate private property by coercive, mandatory, and unconstitutional proceedings.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GIBSON. I do not suppose your point of order extends to the first three lines appropriating $121,200 for the improvement of the Monongahela River in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, but only to the provision in reference to the purchase of the Monongahela Navigation Company's works?

Mr. NEGLEY. That is all. I am in favor of the appropriation for the improvement of the Monongahela River.

In support of my point of order I read from Article V of the Constitution the following:

No person * * * shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

Again, in Article IX the following language occurs:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

The owners of this property had lawful possession of it under a charter of the State of Pennsylvania for a period exceeding fifty years. They have expended a large sum in the work of construction and repairs. For the greater portion of the time it returned no interest on the investment, but was obliged to contribute to the revenue of the State by taxation an annual sum which now amounts to $12,000 per year. The owners are willing to concede the necessity of the Government controlling the navigation of the river and assume charge of their improvements, but they wish to have accorded to them a fair hearing, with a proper adjudication of their rights and a just measure of compensation when the Government takes the property.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not apprehend the point of order which has been made. I did not hear any rule referred to by my colleague.

Mr. NEGLEY. I regret that I can not afford my colleague a better hearing, but I will repeat for his information that in my judgment the provision of the bill under consideration is unconstitutional and oppressive, for it undertakes to seize corporate rights and private property without the due process of law, or providing an appropriation sufficient to pay a fair measure of compensation therefor. Furthermore, we have no reliable data upon which we can intelligently estimate the probable cost of the improvements, or how much it will require to adapt them to a more convenient and extended use.

I also hold that it is not technically an improvement of a river, but the purchase of an improvement already existing and in successful operation.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not see any point in the point of order. There is unquestionably power in the River and Harbor Committee to originate legislation.

Mr. NEGLEY. But the committee must keep within the provisions of the Constitution and the rules of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to be heard on this subject. The general debate was had on the bill when I was absent, as I did not apprehend it would be called up at that time.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the Chair decide the point of order, and then we can determine who is entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order that has been made goes merely to the question of the expediency of the proposed legislation, and therefore rules it is not well taken.

Mr. REAGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that debate on the proposed paragraph be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not limit the debate at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. Say one hour, to be divided equally.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask my colleague on the committee to allow the debate to run along for the present.

Mr. WILLIS. One hour is certainly long enough.

Mr. BAYNE. You can move the committee rise at any time and close the debate when it is found necessary to do so.

Mr. REAGAN. This does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield the floor?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not. I demand the floor.

I move to strike out this paragraph which has been read in reference to the Monongahela Navigation Company. This river is one improved in part by a private corporation and in part by the Government of the United States. The appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of this river by the Government were wholly improper, and were intended to benefit a corporation instead of the commercial interests of the river.

Mr. Chairman, the Government is already engaged in providing slackwater navigation at different points; for instance, on the Fox and Wisonsin Rivers, the channel between Mississippi River and Green Bay and Lake Michigan, Wisconsin. It is also engaged in constructing slackwater navigation on the Great Kanawha River, in West Virginia, and for the Kentucky River; and in addition to this, provision has been made for slackwater navigation for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, to accommodate the commerce of the great lakes; also at the Des Moines Rapids; for the improvement of the Mississippi; for the Louisville and the Welland Canals; for the Ohio River; and it is now proposed to increase these works that are provided for by slackwater navigation by extending it to this river embraced in this bill.

It is to be remembered, on entering upon this work, that we have about 28,000 miles of navigable waters in the United States outside of the necessities for the improvement of the harbors to accommodate our great ocean commerce. It should be remembered also that the money that would be required to provide slackwater navigation on a river for 50 or 100 miles would contribute immensely to the improvement of the harbors of the country to accommodate the general commerce of the country, and it seems to me a wise policy would require us, in the first place, to improve the open waters before commencing the expenditure of vast sums of money in the improvemont of water ways by means of slackwater navigation.

But this bill is all wrong in this: It proposes first to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint three commissioners to condemn the property of this navigation company; first, to assess its value, and demands that on that valuation the company shall make a sale of the work; but it makes no provision that this company shall be represented on the board that is provided for this assessment or condemnation; and after providing this one-sided arrangement for the assessment of the value of the works and the property of the company, it is to be purchased by the Government at the cost so fixed. The bill goes on to say:

But if the said Monongahela Navigation Company refuses to sell its works, or demands a price therefor deemed to be excessive, then the Secretary of War shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire said works by condemnation for the United States; or, in the exercise of his discretion, the Secretary of War may, and he is hereby authorized to, take possession of said works in the name of the United States, to the end that the navigation of said Monongahela River may become free and said works be brought within the provisions of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved 5th day of July, 1884.

Now that law of 1884, having reference to the great works that I have referred to where slackwater navigation is provided, simply meant to throw upon the Government of the United States the expense of operating them. I will read a section from the law:

SEC. 4. That no tolls or operating charges whatsoever shall be levied or collected upon any vessel or vessels, dredges, or other passing water craft through any canal or other work for the improvement of navigation belonging to the United States; and for the purpose of preserving and continuing the use and navigation of said canals, rivers, and other public works without interruption, the Secretary of War, upon the application of the chief engineer in charge of said works, is hereby authorized to draw his warrant or requisition from time to time upon the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the actual expenses of operating and keeping said works in repair.

Mr. BAYNE was recognized.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to have a few minutes additional time.

Mr. BAYNE. If I can be recognized afterward I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas continuing, if some gentleman will yield him his time.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, was recognized, and by consent yielded his time to Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a provision of law looking to the fact that because slackwater navigation was provided on the water courses mentioned by the Government, therefore the expense of operating these works should also be upon the Government of the United States; levying a toll upon the commerce on them by the Government—a policy which I always dissented from. But it is the law, and that ends it.

But you will see, Mr. Chairman, by the provisions of this bill that it is a plain proposition to confiscate the property of that company. It is to the effect that if they will not take the price at which the property is assessed by three persons, neither one of whom they have had any privilege of selecting, if they will not take the price, then the Secretary of War may have it condemned under the law, and can take possession of it and control the navigation of the river under a law which simply relieves their improvements—the Slack-Water Navigation Company—from the expense of operating the work.

Mr. KELLEY. Does it not ignore the property rights of the company?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly. Just as the gentleman has suggested; it does ignore those rights.

Mr. KELLEY. They are not taken into consideration at all.

Mr. REAGAN. This river, as I find by a circular which was placed upon my desk, has a slackwater navigation for about 50 miles. It then states that they are carrying coal over it at 4½ cents a ton, or ⅛ of a cent a bushel. If it be alleged that this river, by reason of the fine coal fields upon it, should be improved, we might answer that there are many streams in the country with many times the volume of water of the Monongahela River, which pass through countries producing wheat, cotton, and other products many times greater in value than the commerce accommodated by the works of this river, which would be more entitled to improvement by slackwater navigation than it is.

I trust the House will consider well before they enter upon new works of slackwater navigation. If we desire to improve the open water ways of this country and to secure a continuance of the passage of bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, we had better not load down such a bill with works which require the expenditure of an immense amount of money for the accommodation of a very small amount of commerce. We had better go on and improve, as we ought to do in my judgment and as I favor doing, by liberal appropriations the water ways of the country, deepen the rivers, removing obstructions, deepen the harbors, removing obstructions, give cheap freights by carrying deep-draught vessels, give cheap freights by obviating high rates of insurance, and do what we can with the few millions of dollars which public sentiment tolerates for such a purpose—better do that than destroy the usefulness of the bill by forcing into it additional works for slackwater navigation, where millions of dollars would be expended for small rivers with comparatively little benefit to the commerce of the country.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a question of order. I ask to be informed by the Chair what amendment is now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the Monongahela River is navigable from Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia, to its mouth at Pittsburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, at which point the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers unite and form the head of the Ohio River.

The Monongahela River has been repeatedly recognized by Congress as a navigable river of the United States. It comes within the judiciary act of 1789, conferring admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in the district courts in cases where seizures are made on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden. Vessels navigating this river are embraced by the act of February 18, 1793, which provides for the registering, enrolling, and licensing of vessels.

The act of August 30, 1852, relating to the inspection of steamboats and boilers, the licensing of pilots and engineers, &c., and the various acts establishing ports of entry, are applicable. And the act of February 13, 1807, declaring Pittsburgh a port of entry, provides:

That from and after June 13, 1807, all the shores and waters of the river Ohio, and the several rivers and creeks emptying into the same, are hereby annexed to, and and shall make a part of, the district of Mississippi, and a surveyor shall be appointed for Pittsburgh, Charleston, Marietta, Cincinnati, &c.

And, in addition to all, that Congress has authorized and appropriated at different times money for the construction of locks and dams in the Monongahela River to promote the commerce and navigation of that river.

Under the power conferred to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, Congress has the right to protect, improve, and control the Monongahela River. The exercise of this authority is not only paramount, but exclusive. This proposition has been decided by the United States courts over and over again.

In United States vs. Duluth, 1 Dillon, 469, the United States filed a bill for injunction to protect improvements made by the United States in the navigable waters between Wisconsin and Minnesota from injury to be caused by improvements in the same waters made under State authority. The United States was proceeding to narrow one channel in order to deepen another, and the State was engaged in cutting a canal which would render the work of the United States abortive. The injunction was granted by Mr. Justice Miller, who said:

That the protection, improvement and general control of navigable waters of the United States are within the constitutional competency of Congress there can be no doubt. This power has been so often asserted both in Congress and in the Supreme Court, that reference to the adjudged cases would be an affectation of learning. No one had denied this for many years past and it is not denied by counsel on the present occasion. It is, however, asserted that the States have concurrent right to authorize improvements on the navigable waters of the United States in which their citizens are interested so far as these waters lie within their territorial limits. That such a power can be exercised by the States may be admitted when it does not injure the general interest of commerce, and when it does not conflict with any control assumed by the Federal Government over the same locality. But all the reported cases which concede this power agree that it exists only while the United States refrains from the assertion of its authority, and that when the latter is called into exercise, it is not only paramount, but exclusive.

In Transportation Company vs. Parkersburg, 107 United States, 691, Mr. Justice Bradley says:

Our system of Government is of a dual character, State and Federal. The States retain general sovereignty and jurisdiction over all local matters within their limits, but the United States, through Congress, is invested with supreme and paramount authority in the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. This has been held to embrace the regulation of the navigable waters of the United States, of which the Ohio River is one. In the exercise of this authority over navigable waters, Congress has from the commencement of the Government erected light-houses, breakwaters, and piers, not only on the seacoast, but in navigable rivers of the country; and has improved the navigation of rivers by dredging and cleaning them and making new channels and jetties, and adopting every other means of making them more capable of meeting the growing and extending demands of commerce. It has extended its supervision in an especial manner to the Ohio River. * * * It has regulated the bridges which have been thrown across the river by authority of the States. It authorized the Wheeling Bridge to stand after this court had declared it to be a nuisance. It required the Newport and Cincinnati Bridge to be removed or placed at a greater height above the water, after having been constructed in accordance with the laws of the States and of the United States.

Now, wharves, levees, and landing places are essential to commerce by water, no less than a navigable channel and a clear river. But they are attached to the land; they are private property, real estate; and they are primarily, at least, subject to the local State laws.

Congress has never yet interposed to supervise their administration; it has hitherto left this exclusively to the States. There is little doubt, however, that Congress, if it saw fit, in case of prevailing abuses in the management of wharf property, abuses materially interfering with the prosecution of commerce, might interpose and make regulations to prevent such abuses.

This decision recognizes the principle that the improvement of a river by Congress is the exercise of authority over it as a navigable water way, and thus brings the Monongahela River within the scope of ample power on the part of Congress to remove or abate any interference with or obstruction of the free navigation of that river.

Now, the commerce and navigation of the Monongahela River is interfered with and obstructed, and the proposition in the bill under consideration looks to the early and effectual removal of that obstruction.

A number of years ago—in 1836, I believe—a number of enterprising gentlemen in Pittsburgh procured a charter from the State of Pennsylvania for the incorporation of the Monongahela Navigation Company. Under this charter the company constructed a series of locks and dams, and from that time on has collected tolls from the entire commerce of the river. The tolls, according to the last report of the company, aggregated for the year 1885 $215,675.31.

The report shows that in that year nearly 86,000,000 bushels of coal and coke passed through one or more of the seven locks of the company, which was almost wholly I suppose in barges and flatboats. The steamboats and other craft pay tolls, but the amount derived from these is small compared with the tribute the coal and coke pay. The cost to the coal interest is pretty well illustrated by some figures prepared by Captain Dravo, of Pittsburgh, who appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in behalf of the free navigation of the Monongahela River. This statement is as follows:

Pool.	Bushels per acre.	Lockage tolls per 1,000 bushels.	Equivalent per acre to—
No. 1	115,000	$0 90	$115 00
No. 2	115,000	1 80	207 00
No. 3	120,000	2 45	294 00
No. 4	130,000	2 65	344 50
No. 5	130,000	2 85	370 50
No. 6	130,000	3 05	396 50

These figures and the aggregate receipts of the company, however, but faintly illustrate the possibilities yet in store for the company if it be permitted to continue the levying of tribute on the commerce of the Monongahela.

I have not the data at hand to show the expanse of these possibilities, but I have here a specimen, from the report of Colonel Merrill, published in the engineers' reports submitted to the Forty-eighth Congress.

I should say that the Youghiogheny River is a tributary of the Monongahela, and empties into it above the second lock of the Monongahela Navigation Company.

The report sets forth this fact:

The coal lands lying within 5 miles of the Youghiogheny River, from its mouth to Ohio Pyle, are estimated at 830 square miles, with an aggregate workable thickness of 30 feet. The total amount of workable coal is therefore about 15,000,000,000 tons, whose value at $3 per ton is $30,000,000,000.

There are, I believe, 25 bushels in a ton of coal. At this rate the coal lying within the described area amounts to 375,000,000,000 bushels, an almost inconceivable quantity. The aggregate national wealth is reported in the census of 1880 to be less than $47,000,000,000; yet here in this strip of the coal fields of Western Pennsylvania there is coal worth $30,000,000,000, or more than three-fifths of the accumulated wealth of the nation.

Now, the gentlemen interested in the Monongahela Navigation Company improved the navigation of the Monongahela because the Government then would not appropriate money for such purposes. That private corporation has provided locks and dams. There are two locks and dams belonging to the United States, one of which is finished and the other in progress of construction by the Government of the United States, and for which appropriation after appropriation has been made, and for which the gentleman from Texas voted when he was a member of the Committee on Commerce without protest, so far as I know.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman can correct me later if I do him injustice. The gentleman voted for appropriations to construct dams in the Monongahela River.

Mr. REAGAN. I voted for the general appropriation bill rather than see it defeated, but always fought the items for that river in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. BAYNE. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy. Now, the proposition in this bill gives them the opportunity to sell by amicable negotiation. If they make a fair proposal the Secretary of War will doubtless favorably report it to Congress under this provision. If they will not, the authority is conferred on the Secretary of War to condemn their works. I regard this provision, however, as of doubtful application. I fear the courts would say that condemnation is supererogatory.

The United States now has the right to take possession and control and to remove the obstruction to the commerce and navigation of the river as a nuisance. It was therefore considered wise by the committee to include the third provision authorizing the Secretary of War to take possession and control. This at once obviates the implication, somewhat established by the authority to condemn, that Congress recognizes a valid property right in the company to occupy the river with its works. That the committee was not willing to admit. And in addition to that the committee means and meant to say by this provision that the navigation of the Monongahela River shall be free.

If the motion of the gentleman from Texas prevails it is obvious that the immense tonnage of this river will have to pay tribute to this private corporation. The coal lying adjacent to the river is of incalculable value, and the tax put upon every acre of that coal by this corporation amounts to an average of $250. Here is a nuisance in the eye of the law—a nuisance that can be abated now in the courts of the United States to-day, because it is an obstruction to commerce upon a navigable highway of the United States.

The question before the House is whether all these vast resources shall pay tribute to this private corporation. Why, sir, the wealth of the great State of Texas pales before the magnitude of the wealth of that section of Pennsylvania. Yet the gentleman asks over a million of dollars for that State. I have voted money for that State, but its wealth and its commerce are insignificant compared to the wealth and the commerce that is adjacent to that Monongahela River; it is a live commerce, too.

As I have said, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided time after time that the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Government over the navigable water ways of the United States is not only paramount, but is exclusive when asserted. I have here decision after decision of the Supreme Court to that effect, which I will incorporate in my remarks.

Now, sir, does anybody suppose that this private corporation, which is making this coal land pay a tribute of $250 an acre, and will continue to make it pay that tribute, thus reducing the power of the producers, making coal dearer to the consumers, keeping down the wages of the operatives—does anybody suppose that this corporation, enjoying this franchise and these benefits, will relinquish them unless some steps are taken by Congress to compel the relinquishment?

All that I propose here is that the Government of the United States shall inform itself, through the Secretary of War, by a commission; that he shall then report to Congress, and then, if this corporation is willing to take a reasonable price, that the Government shall purchase its property. It will claim a valuation for its franchises, but I deny that it has any right or franchise there to collect tolls, or that that is properly an element in the valuation. It is obstructing commerce in a national highway of the United States, and it has no more right to collect tolls there than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would have to establish a toll-house down here on Pennsylvania avenue and make every pedestrian pay 2 cents and every vehicle 5 cents toll.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the commerce that originates on the part of the river above these improvements, the part on which the Government has made improvements, pays toll?

Mr. BAYNE. It all pays toll; this corporation levies a tribute on everything; it collects about $200,000 a year in tolls.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Can you tell about how much the United States would have to pay for this property?

Mr. BAYNE. Its plant is worth about a million dollars. It says three millions; but in that estimate it counts its franchise as of value. I, on the other hand, deny that the State of Pennsylvania ever had the right to locate that corporation in that stream any more, as I suggested a while ago, than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] would have a right to locate a toll-house on Pennsylvania avenue and levy a toll on all the people passing along that street.

Mr. BLANCHARD was recognized.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. If I can be recognized later I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN] in order that he may yield to his colleague, although I desire to speak on the same side.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the gentleman will be recognized for the purpose indicated.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, was recognized and yielded to Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, having a little more time, I will read from one of the decisions of the Supreme Court I have here bearing upon this point. It is in the case of South Carolina vs. Georgia, 93 United States, page 4. The summary of the opinion is all that I will have time to read now. It is in this language:

> When it is insisted, that although Congress could remove obstructions, it had no power to authorize placing obstructions in the bed of a stream, the court denied the position, and said if it were true every structure erected in the bed of a river, whether in the channel or not, would be an obstruction. It might be a light-house erected on a submerged sand-bank, or a jetty pushed out into the stream to narrow the way, or a pier of a bridge standing where vessels now pass.

And then, without going further into it, the court held that the United States had the power to do that, but no other authority had the power to do it, and although the United States had that authority, if it were a navigable river of the United States, any other person or corporation undertaking to do that thing committed a nuisance and might be indicted in the courts of the United States, because the jurisdiction, control, and authority of the United States over the navigable water ways of the United States was paramount and exclusive.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman whether that was ever at any time a navigable stream for steamboats?

Mr. BAYNE. It has been a navigable stream ever since the Ohio River was navigable and partakes of the same navigable quality of that river.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not yield. I know what the gentleman is going to say, and I will answer him. This company claims that it made this river a navigable stream. But it was navigable before the works of the company were located there. The great tonnage which now goes down the Ohio River would do so though the Monongahela Navigation Company had never put a lock or dam there. This company asserts in a printed memorial which has been circulated here that it built up the tonnage of this river, that it created an immense tonnage by constructing these locks and dams. That is an unfounded allegation.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I can not yield unless I have more time.

The fact is, the tonnage of that river has increased because the coal from a point called Sawmill Run up to where the first dam is located had been exhausted. Mining operations have been moving up and up the river, but, like Bitter Creek, the farther you go up the worse the tolls get, and by the time you get to the fifth or sixth pool the tax levied by this corporation amounts to nearly $400 per acre.

I want to treat this corporation fairly and justly by paying it a fair price for its plant, but I want the navigation of that river free.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, what is this proposition? It is simply that the Government of the United States shall assume control of its own property. The Monongahela is now and ever has been a navigable water of the United States, and as such the property of the United States. In 1836 the State of Pennsylvania chartered the Monongahela Navigation Company; for what purpose? To improve the navigation of a river which belonged, not to the State of Pennsylvania, but to the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States has defined what is a navigable water way of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will read that decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have only five minutes; but I have here the syllabus of the decision, and will read it. The case is in 11 Wallace, 411:

> A river is a navigable water of the United States when it forms by itself or by its connection with other water ways a continuous highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other States or foreign countries in the customary modes in which such commerce is conducted by water. If a river is not of itself a highway for commerce with other States or foreign countries, or does not form such highway by its connection with other waters, and is only navigable between different places within the State, then it is not a navigable water of the United States, but only a navigable water of the State.

Now, the Monongahela River by its junction with the Allegheny forms the great Ohio, and the Ohio flows into the Mississippi, which in turn connects with the ocean. Thus it will be seen that these rivers and all their tributaries are, under this decision of the Supreme Court, navigable water ways of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that this river was not navigable until it was improved by this navigation company. I deny it. I hold in my hand the memorial of this company, in which they admit that the Monongahela in times of freshet—in other words, in high stages of the water—was always navigable for boats and coal-barges.

Mr. REAGAN. When coming downstream.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It does not make any difference whether they ran down stream or up. If the river at any time before this navigation company began its improvement was navigable for boats, it was a navigable water way of the United States.

Mr. NEGLEY rose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield. This river being a navigable water way of the United States, being the property of the United States, why can not the Congress of the United States assert the ownership of the Federal Government and assume control of the river? In doing so, it is proposed to pay this navigation company for the value of their works and their plant. So long as the Government of the United States saw fit to allow this navigation company to hold control of the river it (the company) could do so. But the moment Congress steps in and says, "This is the property of the United States and the Government will assume control of it," where is the authority to say the Government shall not do it? Where is the provision of the Constitution or the laws which says "nay" to this proposition?

It is not a proposition to take private property without due compensation. On the contrary, it is provided in the bill that the property shall be condemned if the navigation company will not consent to take a reasonable price for it——

Mr. NEGLEY. Who is to determine what is a reasonable price?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The property is to be condemned in the manner pointed out by law. There is an alternative provision declaring that if it should be impossible to get the navigation company to accept a reasonable price, the Secretary of War, in the exercise of the authority of the Government over its property, to wit, the Monongahela River, can take possession of that river. This does not mean that we are to take possession of the works and plant of the company without payment. Under the jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Claims this navigation company could go to that court under the implied contract resulting from the act of taking and prove the amount of damages sustained by reason of this act of the Government, and the Congress of the United States would make an appropriation to cover the judgment thus recovered.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say it may be an old-fashioned notion of mine, but I can not help thinking Congress should recognize the rights of property, and, rather than judge the infinite number of important questions decided by my colleague [Mr. BAYNE] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], should also recognize the rights of the judiciary.

Here is a property held by charter of the State of Pennslyvania for half a century. Here is a stream upon which no boat floated, except in time of a freshet, downstream, and over which and at the peril of freshets 20,000 tons of coal was all that could be extracted from beds so eloquently depicted by my colleague. A company of energetic business men, with one of whom I served the first ten years of my Congressional life, engaged in its improvement, and but for generous friends would all have been bankrupted. They have made seven dams, eleven cut-stone locks, and the 20,000 tons of coal have come to be millions of tons moved annually. And instead of being carried at the risk and the cost they were, they are carried for .17 cent per bushel for 56 miles at all seasons of the year when a river in that latitude may be navigated at all.

But now it is proposed to say to three Army engineers: Tell the Secretary of War what you think that property is worth. You are not to take the corporate franchise into consideration. You are not to take the fact that for twenty years and more no dividend was paid to anybody who had all his industry and his means in it. You Army engineers are to take up the practical business question, and say what the works would cost if they had been constructed by economical Army engineers.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to my colleagues here, if there be questions involved they are judicial questions. They are questions which the Government of the United States could raise in its own courts and have decided decently and in order. Why, the lord high executioner himself could not dispose of petty messes and states of things more promptly or with less decorum than my colleague and the gentleman from Louisiana are doing here in handling millions of invested capital and treating a highway over which countless hundreds of millions of property find their outlet and market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS. I will take the floor and yield my five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. KELLEY. I have heard of a great many propositions here in this Hall. In twenty-five years I have seen some strange sights. I have seen a Speaker of the House forget an ex-governor was on the floor and recognize another gentleman and put his bill through, and then apologize to the ex-governor of Maryland. [Laughter.]

I have seen to-day an amendment adopted especially by votes on that side, when a gentleman sitting next to the Speaker did not know on what subject he was speaking. [Renewed laughter.] But, sir, I have never seen anything more astounding than this proposition, that such subtle, intricate, complex, and far-reaching questions of law should be thrown out like fireworks, and then disposed of at once by proposing that a Congressional vote should settle them. If the gentleman is disposed to raise any question by which the individual property of citizens can be guarded against his socialistic tendencies I will go with him and help get the question into the courts. But I have known the story of this work for forty-five years almost. I have seen the desperate struggle of J. R. Moorhead and his energetic brothers to build this work and to complete it. I think the proposition embodied in the bill is little short—I dare not say the word, but I will say I think the arguments by which it has been sustained are not short of infamous in their proposition to dispose of individual rights of citizens of Pennsylvania by town meeting, which seems to be the proposition here to-day.

Gentlemen on both sides of this House, I ask you whether you want to agree to take this property at such price as either a board of engineers or as the Secretary of War shall assess its value; whether you want to agree to buy an improved river, a corporate estate, without having a voice as to what the price shall be; or whether you want to shock the owners of property on rivers that may be made, or have been made, navigable by saying that the doctrines of socialism control Congress, and that their rights are no longer sacred?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the full scope of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. That amendment has a double operation. First, it proposes to strike from this bill an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Monongahela River in the States of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

I desire now to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not a new feature in a river and harbor bill, but that this is in the line of appropriations which have been contained in every river and harbor bill which this House for the last fourteen years has passed——

Mr. NEGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Can he find, and if he can I wish he would find, upon the page of any bill introduced since the organization of this Government a proposition so infamous in its purposes as that embodied here?

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania entirely misapprehends the scope of my remarks. I have not yet alluded to that portion of the bill which so excites his ire and to which he is so much opposed. I take it my friend and neighbor from Pittsburgh is as much in favor as I am of continuing the improvement of the Monongahela River.

Mr. NEGLEY. Then make it in the proper way.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the attention of the committee to the fact that the appropriation the gentleman from Texas desires to strike from the bill, along with the provisions which look to the acquisition of the works of the Monongahela Navigation Company by the Government, is not a new departure, but is simply a continuance of a work which has been carried on by the Government since 1872, and for which appropriations have been continued in every river and harbor bill which has passed this Congress since that time. Many of these river and harbor bills were passed when my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] was chairman of the Committee on Commerce and intrusted with their preparation.

Now, sir, Congress began as far back as 1872 to continue the improvement of slackwater navigation on the Monongahela River, with the purpose of carrying that slackwater navigation from dam No. 6, where it ceased, under the improvements of this company, down to Morgantown, in the State of West Virginia, near the head of the falls upon that river. In the course of that improvement the Government has had constructed and entirely completed, and has to-day in successful operation, the ninth in number of these dams reckoning from the city of Pittsburgh. The amount which is contained in this bill, in the appropriations for this purpose, is designed to be a final and concluding appropriation for the completion of dam No. 8, upon which, according to the report of the engineers, a large amount of work has already been done, and which dam is now from 2 to 4 feet above the level of the pool of lock No. 7.

This committee will find in the river and harbor bill of 1881, when an appropriation of $25,000 was made for this particular work, that it was made upon condition that this Monongahela River Improvement Company should satisfy the Secretary of War before that appropriation became available that it intended to complete dam No. 7. I take it that the company did so satisfy the Secretary of War. Dam No. 7 has been completed, and the amount to be appropriated in this bill is simply the conclusion of the entire work undertaken by the Government to complete slackwater navigation of the Monongahela River up to the falls in that river.

I want the committee in voting upon the motion of the gentleman from Texas—and I shall ask for a division upon that—to understand that the money appropriated in this bill is entirely distinct from the proposition contained in it to acquire free for the use of shippers upon the river the works now owned by this particular company.

Mr. Chairman, I need hardly say, perhaps, in view of what has been the action of this House for many years in the past, that this river is one of the important lines of interstate commerce. All of these improvements undertaken by the Government are undertaken in the State of West Virginia. Those which are down in the State of Pennsylvania are under the auspices and at the expense of this navigation company. It is the State of West Virginia, the northern section of that State, along the upper waters of the Monongahela River and along the waters of Cheat River, the chief affluents of the Monongahela, that is particularly and vitally interested in this appropriation and in the completion of the slackwater navigation of that river. It is a country which is rich in agricultural resources as well as in its resources of timber.

Mr. WILLIS. With the view of coming to something practical in this discussion, I call attention of the committee to the fact that there are four things embraced in this paragraph. First, there is an appropriation for the benefit of slackwater navigation on the Monongahela River, the proposition to which the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has just addressed himself. There are three parts of the remaining portion of the paragraph. One is to obtain by voluntary purchase these works of the Monongahela Company. I suppose nobody objects to that, my friend from Pennsylvania or anybody else. The company does not object. The second proposition is that in the event an agreement can not be had in regard to the purchase of those works they shall be acquired by condemnation. The third proposition is to give authority to the Secretary of War to enter upon these works and take possession of them.

I desire, in order to get to something practical, to offer an amendment, to strike out that portion of the paragraph which authorizes the Secretary to enter into and take possession of these works. I move to strike out from line 477, after the semicolon, to the end of line 486, after "1884." That strikes out the whole paragraph which relates to the Secretary of War taking possession of these works in the name of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to discuss the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]?

Mr. WILLIS. I would rather yield to a vote.

Mr. HEWITT. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEWITT. An amendment is already pending which was offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and has not been withdrawn. I submit therefore that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is not in order at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] offered an amendment, and then the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to amend what would be stricken out by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HEWITT. The motion of the gentleman from Texas was to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. WILLIS. And the friends of the paragraph, before a vote is taken upon that, have a right to perfect it by offering an amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. And upon that I desire to say a word.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky should be reported from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct that to be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "States," in line 477, down to and including "1884," in line 486; namely, these words: "Or in the exercise of his discretion, the Secretary of War may, and he is hereby authorized to, take possession of said works in the name of the United States, to the end that the navigation of said Monongahela River may become free and said works be brought within the provisions of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved July 5, 1884."

Mr. REAGAN. I desire now, in response to the argument that the proposed act would be the Government of the United States taking possession of a navigable river, to say that under no statement of facts that has ever been made on this subject could the Monongahela be held to be one of the rivers recognized as a navigable river. It was never navigated by steamboats, and surely it can not be assumed that a river is a navigable river in the view of the Constitution that can only be navigated in high water by flatboats running downstream. It does not matter that it connects with the Ohio and that with the Mississippi and that with the ocean, as has been suggested. It is one of the small tributaries of the Ohio River, and one of those rivers that the State of Pennsylvania recognized as subject to be controlled by the authority of that State, and it incorporated a private company to make it navigable by costly works of locks and dams.

That is what I have to say on that subject, that this is not and never was a navigable river in the sense of the Constitution. And the attempt to assert the power of Congress over it is to place Congress in the ridiculous position of being overruled by the first court that should try the question.

Now, a word as to the suggestion of the gentleman from West Virginia and the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. As I stated in my former remarks, the Government has gone on to build some locks and dams which that private corporation gets the benefit of. This appropriation, with that property in the hands of a private corporation—and I wish this House to understand it—is a proposition for the Government to go on building slackwater navigation for the benefit of a private corporation and nothing else. The works are proposed to be put above the company's works, and the commerce to come over them must go over the company's works and pay toll to them.

One or two gentlemen have mentioned that because this river is partly in West Virginia and partly in Pennsylvania it is an interstate-commerce river. Why, sir, there is no such thing as an interstate-commerce river or railroad. There is interstate commerce, but there are no interstate rivers. And so not only the political action of this country but the decisions of the courts have held over and over that it is the commerce passing out of a navigable stream by proper connection with navigation into other States or foreign countries and to and fro that makes it a navigable stream under the Constitution. In the case which occurred long ago from Michigan in relation to a river wholly within the State and but 40 miles in length, the court held that was a river under the jurisdiction of Congress, because the commerce that passed over it went into other States and into Canada, which made it interstate commerce and commerce with a foreign country. It is the commerce we can regulate, not the river. It is the commerce we can regulate, not the railroads. And if the committee chooses to appropriate this $120,000 for the benefit of a private corporation no doubt the corporation will be obliged to them, but the people will have to pay the same tolls on the commerce that passes over these works that they pay now and as they would have to pay if the company finished its own works according to the original plan.

What I want to protest against is any appropriation for this purpose so long as this property belongs to a private company. The House has been told by two or three gentlemen that I have voted on former occasions for the improvement of this river. I desire to repeat now, in my own time, that there never has been an appropriation made for it while I have been on the Committee on Commerce that I did not resist with all my power, although I was never willing to give up the whole bill because the committee overruled me on that particular item; and now, sincerely as I would regret to see such a step taken by this Congress as undertaking to make a stream "navigable," and to bring it under the maritime jurisdiction of the United States, because flatboats could be floated down it during freshets, or to take this company's property from them in an improper way, yet if this provision is adopted I shall still feel constrained to vote for the bill. But I again warn the committee and the friends of rivers and harbors that if they desire to continue to improve the rivers and the lakes and the harbors of the country they had better keep jobs of this kind off their river and harbor bill.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ascertain what became of the point of order which I had the merit of raising. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to decide the point of order when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] took the floor. The original motion was to strike out the paragraph. It has been held repeatedly by those who have occupied this chair, that when a proposition is made to strike out a paragraph, the friends of the paragraph are first to make it as perfect as they can. The Chair would state, however, that the first question before the House is upon the amendment proposed by the committee, which takes precedence, and the Clerk will now report that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Monongahela River, Pennsylvania and West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $121,200.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment proposed by the committee, and that is the question now before the House.

Mr. HEWITT. Can I be recognized upon that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with my friend from Pennsylvania [Judge KELLEY] that a great many extraordinary propositions have been made in this House, but that this is perhaps one of the most remarkable and most indefensible, when it is considered either from the constitutional point of view or from the judicial point of view, or as to its results upon the personal interests of private individuals. I shall deal only with this latter aspect of the case.

We have had the unusual spectacle of a committee apologizing to this House, item after item, for the fact that they are compelled to cut down appropriations for useful works in order that this bill may not "pan out" to an aggregate too great for the House to adopt; yet they bring in here a provision which is not defined in amount, but which, if I understand correctly the figures of the circular which has been sent out by the owners of the Monongahela navigation works, will absorb not less than three and a half millions of dollars. And more than that, the cost of maintaining those works amounts to $100,000 a year, which is the interest of over $3,000,000 more, besides the extraordinary expenses caused by freshets, which always amount to a large sum, assumed to be about $50,000 a year, being the interest on nearly two millions more. So that this proposition practically amounts to this—the appropriation of between eight and nine million dollars of the public money for one item in a bill which professes to carry only $14,000,000.

Mr. BAYNE. Oh, my friend is grievously mistaken.

Mr. HEWITT. I did not interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], but I will thank him if he will get me five minutes' time when I am through with my own, in order to prove that he, and not I, is mistaken.

Now, Mr. Chairman, for whose benefit is this huge expenditure to be made? Is it for public or private advantage? We were told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that this river is the outlet of 850 square miles of territory underlaid by coal 30 feet thick, aggregating 15,000,000,000 tons of coal, which must all pass through this outlet, and the value of which he computed at $30,000,000,000. That coal pays to-day about 5 cents a ton for the use of this outlet to market.

Five cents a ton upon 15,000,000,000 tons is $750,000,000, the modest sum which, according to the gentleman's own figures he triumphantly shows to me as the evidence of his accuracy, we are coolly asked to present to the owners of these 850 square miles of coal lands for their private benefit, and not for the benefit of any consumer whatever; for it is a law of trade that no man can controvert that things are not sold by what they cost, but at their market value in the market in which they are sold. The place where this coal is sold is Pittsburgh. Its price is made there. This coal land, which is worth to-day a thousand dollars an acre, would be raised by this act, according to one computation of the memorial on our desk, to $1,250 an acre, aggregating on the whole area an advance, as I have said, of $750,000,000.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Do you object to that?

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, I do, if I and my constituents have got to pay for it by appropriations out of the public Treasury, yielding no benefit to them in return.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL was recognized, and yielded to Mr. HEWITT.

Mr. HEWITT. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. Speaker, it is the owner of these lands alone who will get the benefit of this appropriation from the United States Treasury and of this vast saving which in all time to come is to inure to their advantage, for it is preposterous to claim that the consumer will get any reduction in the price of coal, because the owners of these coal lands now sell 4,000,000 tons annually at the current price, and they are not going to throw away 5 cents per ton, amounting to $200,000 a year, simply because Congress has increased their profits to that extent.

Now, if they want to enhance the value of their land, why do they not go and buy out these owners of these works, pay the three and a half millions of dollars, if that be the sum necessary for the purchase, and make the navigation free, maintaining it at their own expense out of the magnificent fund of value which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has told the House his constituents possess in that vast property? Thirty thousand millions of dollars was the sum named; and the owners of thirty thousand millions of dollars come to this House and ask us to vote away three and a half millions and the equivalent of five millions more of the public money in order that they may profit at our expense. Why, it is the most impudent proposition that in all my knowledge of public affairs I have ever heard. It has but one redeeming feature, and that is its audacity. It is the application of a colossal mendicant, who comes here and asks us to still further enrich the coffers of wealth which are already overflowing from the vast endowments of nature, of which it enjoys a practical monopoly. It is in this region that the labor troubles have been most aggravated, bitter, and desolating. It is the owners of these vast coal fields who are unwilling, out of this great fund, to pay decent wages to their miners. It is there that foreign laborers—Hungarians, Poles, Italians, and others—have been imported from all quarters of the habitable globe in order to protect American labor! Heaven save the mark! And yet the men who are reveling in this great wealth come here seeking to put their hands into the Treasury of the United States, and ask my constituents and your constituents to tax themselves in order to roll up their already overgrown fortunes. I protest against such an outrage of all justice on behalf of the tax-payers of this country; and I trust this House will not consent to this legislation because the committee has been misled in reporting it. [Applause.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the question now to be voted on has no relation to the matter of condemnation at all. The motion before the Committee of the Whole is the amendment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors making an appropriation for the continuation of this work. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] opposes any appropriation. He resists the adoption of this amendment for reasons which it seems to me can not be maintained. I undertake to say there can be no improvement of any public stream unless at the same time you incidentally help some private interests; and I am astonished at the position now taken by a gentleman who has so eloquently and so persistently advocated the improvement of the harbor of Galveston when every foot of mud that is dug out helps to let in a ship to the private wharves of a private corporation that is taxing the commerce there. You can not improve a single harbor unless you thereby let ships come into some private pier or wharf where they are to be taxed and the commerce tolled. Why, then, simply because a part of this stream has been already improved by private enterprise for good, honorable, and upright purposes, building up the commerce of the country, should we deny to those who have done this the incidental benefit of some of the fostering care of this Government in the development of the interests of commerce?

There was a time when this Government refused to carry on improvements of this character. It then became necessary for private interests to improve this water way; and they did so only so far as their own advantage was concerned, leaving above their improvement miles of stream and thousands of people that could receive no benefit from their work. If these individuals have improved that property they have but done that which the General Government would now do if it were not already done; and I want to appeal to this House not to let the works which have been carried on there so long stop now. Those works are nearly completed; it will take but a little more to finish them. I beg the House also to remember in voting upon this amendment that it does not embrace the proposition of condemnation, purchase, or acquirement, but simply the question whether you shall insert in this bill an appropriation for this work.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we shall have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], his position is that he desires this matter of the Monongahela River to stand as it does now. For one I am not content that that shall be so; and I wish to call attention to the present condition of that river.

Mr. KELLEY. As the gentleman has referred to me, I ask leave to interrupt him so far as to restate my position. I desire that this matter shall stand as it is now, or be changed legally and by due forms of law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not willing that it should stand as it is now for a single hour, and for this reason: The private corporation for which the gentleman has spoken so pathetically has acquired a semblance of title, by occupation and without any authority of law, to 56 miles of that river, and year after year the Congress of the United States—I assume with the consent at least of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania—has been putting locks and dams into the river above those 56 miles and extending the navigation up into a very valuable country. What has been the effect of all this?

Mr. KELLEY. The rights of the company were granted by the State of Pennsylvania half a century ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not discussing the question of the rights of the company. I am protesting against the action of Congress in putting money into the pockets of a private corporation that has acquired some sort of title to a navigable river of the United States.

It has been provided in bills for which the gentleman, I assume, has always voted that this improved navigation shall not be charged for. What does that mean? It means the Government has extended its work over a great stretch of the river and made it navigable and poured this commerce down upon the locks and dams of a private corporation, thereby making their property valuable. I do not wonder the gentlemen who projected it did not get rich sooner, but I am not surprised they did get rich when they got the Government of the United States to improve the navigation of that river and pour that commerce down in order they might tax it in the lower part of the river.

I hope the House will not consent to the improvement of private property in that river, and for one I shall vote against any proposition to improve the Monongahela River in the future, because I am wholly and unalterably opposed to putting the money of the Government into partnership with a private corporation and thereby improving the property of that corporation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is an important question the committee is considering, and because it is, is my apology for appearing the second time before the committee.

The gentleman from Texas, my friend Judge REAGAN, in his last remarks claimed that the Monongahela River prior to this improvement had not been a navigable water way of the United States under any law or decision of the courts of the United States defining what is a navigable water of the United States.

And he stated, which I think was conjecture merely on his part, that prior to this improvement the only navigation on this river had been by means of flatboats. I deny that. But conceding it to be true, I hold in my hand a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which shows beyond peradventure the learned gentleman from Texas was mistaken even in that. In the case of the Montello, decided in 1874 by the Supreme Court of the United States (20 Wallace, 430), on this very question of the navigability of a stream in order to bring it within the meaning of the words "navigable waters of the United States," the court held thus, and I call it particularly to the attention of my friend from Texas:

THE MONTELLO.

1. The navigability of a stream for the purpose of bringing it within the terms "navigable waters of the United States" does not depend upon the mode by which commerce is conducted upon it, as whether by steamers or sailing vessels or Durham boats, nor upon the difficulties attending navigation, such as those made by falls, rapids, and sand-bars, even though these be so great as that while they last they prevent the use of the best means, such as steamboats, for carrying on commerce. It depends upon the fact whether the river in its natural state is such as that it affords a channel for useful commerce.

2. These doctrines applied to the Fox River, in Wisconsin, a river whose navigability was originally so much embarrassed by rocks, rapids, &c., as that only Durham boats could use the stream, but which afterward, by canals, locks, and other artificial means, was so much improved as that steamboats could use it freely, the river having, however, never in its natural state been a channel for useful commerce.

The Durham boats referred to in the syllabus read are described in the decision as long, narrow boats, from 70 to 100 feet long and 12 broad, drawing when loaded from 2 to 2½ feet, which men would push with poles or propel with oars or have dragged by horses or mules, sometimes in very shallow water, wading alongside and pushing the boats onward themselves.

In the decision referred to the court held that a tributary of the Mississippi River susceptible of navigation only by such craft was nevertheless a navigable water of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that we will vote now on the clause making an appropriation. There are other propositions which will allow ample time for debate.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I consent, with the understanding I may be heard on those propositions when they come up.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized afterward.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote on the proposition.

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the committee on which the vote is now to be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Monongahela River, Pennsylvania and West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $121,200.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a question of information. Is the amendment of the committee to strike out the words which have been read?

The CHAIRMAN. No, but to insert them.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The question next recurred on Mr. WILLIS's amendment, as follows:

Strike out the following words:

"Or, in the exercise of his discretion, the Secretary of War may, and he is hereby authorized to, take possession of said works in the name of the United States, to the end that the navigation of said Monongahela River may become free and said works be brought within the provisions of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved 5th day of July, 1884."

Mr. NEGLEY. I wish to offer a substitute for that amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will allow this to be voted on.

Mr. NEGLEY. It contains an objectionable feature; there should be a civilian on that commission.

Mr. WILLIS. It does not interfere with that.

Mr. NEGLEY. I want to make an amendment to perfect it.

Mr. REAGAN. I have an amendment pending to strike out that section.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion will be in order after the committee has perfected the section. The question is on the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 468, after the word "war," the words "who shall transmit the same to Congress," and strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to line 491.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. My object in making this amendment is simply to provide that the Government should not be committed by this enterprise to the purchase of the works at the price which may be fixed by this commission until a report is made and Congress may exercise its judgment as to the probable value. As the matter now stands, notwithstanding the amendment of the chairman of the committee, it will be competent for the Secretary of War to take the works upon the river after they have been condemned and impose the cost upon the Government without an opportunity on the part of Congress to revoke or control the award.

I wish to call the attention of the committee, having devoted some time to this work, to three or four features of this bill which are quite extraordinary, and I ask the attention of the committee for a moment while I point out the provisions of the bill which, as I have said, mark something like a new departure in this entire business.

This is a proposition, as has been well said by the Representative from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], for this Government to engage in the purchase of works upon rivers which heretofore have been supposed to be entirely within the jurisdiction of the States.

Now, I have to say, in reply to some law which has been cited here, after some study and reflection, I challenge proof that the Supreme Court of the United States have ever held that a stream such as the Monongahela was, before the works in question were erected, in the sense of the law a navigable stream. In the case decided more than forty years ago—the case of Veazie vs. Moor—the Supreme Court held that the jurisdiction of the State over that part of the Penobscot River where the stream was not navigable at its natural stage for any useful purposes of commerce was exclusively within the control of the State. And it is quite probable, in fact it is clear and demonstrable, that there is authority in the State to deal with a river, and to expend money for its navigation, in relation to that part of the river which is not navigable, in the ordinary sense of the word, for commercial purposes. The case, therefore, which has been cited by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] is not a case in point. That is a case where the Supreme Court held, and held simply that and no more, that the river was navigable when it could be used in its natural state as a channel for any useful purposes of commerce.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we will now have a vote.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I would like to have a word or two further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELY was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. STONE.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that they are entering upon new legislation without realizing it. They are attempting in this bill to adopt works which have been undertaken by citizens or by the States and impose the expense of operating them upon the General Government; and, as has been well said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], we have quite enough to do in dealing with cases which have been already considered by the Government before we undertake to enter upon the unlimited field which would be opened up if we attempt to deal with rivers that heretofore have been exclusively within the jurisdiction of the State. I therefore ask that you hesitate before engaging in this or any other similar improvement.

All I ask now is that the amendment I have offered may be considered by the committee before the Government is committed to this work, so that it shall have a report from the commission appointed for the purpose, which report shall be considered by Congress, with the probable cost, and that is all. I say that is sound administration, and everything else is bad administration. It is certainly bad administration to adopt this provision as it is, since it would involve the Government in consequences that we do not now realize. I therefore ask a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I have an amendment which I believe is in order before that of the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is to prescribe or modify the method of this condemnation, leaving of course the question of whether we order it or not afterward.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILLIS. His amendment is to strike out that which I propose to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky will be first read.

Insert after the word "State," in line 477:

"By proceedings in the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania, in the manner provided for the taking and condemning of lands for railroad purposes, under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, entitled 'An act regulating railroad companies,' approved February 19, 1849, and the supplement thereto, so far as the same may be applicable."

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that if this property is to be condemned it would have to be condemned under the laws of Pennsylvania. That is the course pursued in all the States where it has been necessary to condemn property for the use of the Government and its public works. It is condemned under the laws of the States.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman had listened to the amendment he would have found that it is in harmony with his suggestion. It gives the courts jurisdiction under the laws of the State.

Mr. REAGAN. But if you are to proceed under the laws of the State you can not give the Federal court jurisdiction.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I want to say a word or two on this amendment. I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky does not materially change the proposition as it stands. The bill as it stands provides this property shall be taken and condemned.

Mr. WILLIS. If my friend will permit me, I will say my amendment leaves that question still open to be voted on.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I want to put this in such a shape that this Government shall have some control over it.

Mr. WILLIS. My friend and I are not in conflict. The other proposition will come up after this is disposed of. My amendment is not intended to take the place of his.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 46.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on the point of no quorum.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PLYMOUTH NATIONAL MONUMENT.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Library to report an original bill in aid of the national monument at Plymouth, Mass.

The bill (S. 2224) in aid of the national monument at Plymouth, Mass., was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill may be read at length for information, and then I shall ask unanimous consent that it may be put upon its passage at this time.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas a national monument to the Pilgrim forefathers is in process of construction at Plymouth, Mass., consisting of a central figure of Faith and of four subordinate statues representing Morality, Education, Law, and Liberty, of which five the first three have already been erected: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting said statue of liberty and the bas-relief accompanying the same, under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOAR. I ask consent to say one word in explanation of the bill. The policy which the Committee on the Library have adopted, and which Congress has ratified wherever there has been a national appropriation in aid of these monuments, has been to require at least one-half the expense to be paid by the State or other locality or from private sources. Toward this monument I am told the sum of about $120,000 has already been raised or is to be raised and expended for that purpose. The central figure has been contributed by a public-spirited citizen of the State of Massachusetts; and Connecticut and citizens throughout the country have contributed, as I am told, about $120,000. I am not prepared to be exact in that statement. I have a list of the contributors here, but I have not footed it up. All that Congress is asked to do is to provide one of the four smaller statues at an expense of $15,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. VEST. I think it had better go to a committee. I do not understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported from the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VEST. Reported now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reported at this time.

Mr. MAXEY. I only want to say that very large appropriations of money have been paid out of the Treasury for monuments and I know of no good reason for it. I think we have carried it far enough. I suppose this is just as good as the rest of them. It would be useless to interpose objection to each bill, but I desire to place myself on record as opposed to the practice.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator speak a little louder, if he pleases?

Mr. MAXEY. I was simply remarking that we have in the last several years been making large appropriations out of the Treasury for the purpose of building monuments. In my judgment any great event in history which is worthy to be perpetuated in the memory of the American people will be perpetuated just about as well without a monument as with it, and so of the memory of any distinguished man.

I think that to be true, and I know of no reason why these appropriations should be made at all. I have never seen any stated. I have interposed no objection because I have thought it would be useless. This town is covered over with statues and monuments, for what good purpose I have never yet been able to see; and Congress is spreading them out now all over the country, wasting as I think the money of the people without good and sufficient reason and without good and sufficient consideration.

I only desire to say that much, not so far as this particular monument is concerned but generally. I suppose this is just about as good as any of the rest.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think I can make a statement which I am quite sure will remove the objection of any Senator in regard to this particular monument.

Congress has already appropriated for some fifteen or twenty public monuments of this kind, at Yorktown and all over the country, as Senators know. The State of Massachusetts, which has had within her limited territory certainly her fair share of such historic spots, has never appealed to Congress for any aid in commemorating them. Bunker Hill monument, at a cost of some sixty or eighty thousand dollars, the beautiful monument at Concord, that superb statue of the minute-man, the monuments at Lexington and monuments at other places have been built by the citizens of that State from their own resources, although they have contributed heartily and without hesitation to all the national monuments erected by the nation all over the country.

Mr. MORRILL. And at Bennington?

Mr. HOAR. And at Bennington among others, and Yorktown, and so on. I did not undertake to name them.

Now, this monument at Plymouth commemorates what everybody agrees is one of the most interesting and important events in the history of the human race. It is not merely national; it is universal. It is the landing of the spirit of liberty and the spirit of religion upon this new continent, those two spirits to which this continent is forever to be dedicated. As I have already said, the large cost of this superb monument has been contributed by the State of Massachusetts and by private sources, except the contribution of the State of Connecticut, and Congress is asked to contribute simply this one statue of liberty at the small cost of $15,000. It is not that Massachusetts needs any help in erecting this monument to a great event in the history of humanity. It is that the nation may be fairly represented and may have a part in the commemoration that this bill is suggested.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have uniformly opposed appropriations for these monuments and celebrations. When the Yorktown monument project was before the Senate, which was among the first since I have been a member of the body, I opposed that, and opposed it to the best of my ability, but failed to defeat its passage. One or two subsequent cases came before the Senate and I opposed them. I am opposed to the whole system and plan of the National Government appropriating the people's money for the purposes contemplated by the Yorktown and other monuments.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to add only this to what I said before: I remember in Victor Hugo's Notre Dame the most graphic and beautiful description of the relative merits of the book of granite, as he styles it, that is to say, the perpetuation of great deeds and the history of great men through statues and monuments and great achievements in architecture, and a comparison of that with the wonderful art of printing, or, as he styles it, the great battle between the book of granite and the book of paper, the work of Guttenberg four hundred and fifty years ago.

Now, that which is attempted to be perpetuated by a monument, by architecture, by a statue, is in its very nature local. It applies only to the immediate class of people who can see the object and can comprehend the lessons attempted to be taught by that work, by that book of granite as he styles it. But, sir, when it is put in print it is scattered to the four winds of the earth, and every nation of the earth may find the description, may read and comprehend the purpose and design of that which is attempted and designed to be perpetuated, whether it be the memory of a man or of a great event. So I think that practically the book of paper has slain the book of granite. As was said in that work, while the whole world was whitened with works of architecture, which was then the only book, the book before printing was discovered, yet to-day the world learns through books and not through works of granite or of marble.

The money which is placed in the Treasury of the United States is to be taken out of the hard earnings of the people for wise purposes—to carry on and conduct this Government; not, as I think, for the purpose of being expended in works of art, however valuable they may be in and of themselves, but for the purpose of carrying on the Government.

I desire to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that what I say has no reference whatever to his special measure. I am speaking because I do not believe in the principle at all, and I have never believed in it. I have no doubt this is as worthy as any of the rest, and I interpose no objection whatever to the consideration of the bill. I only desired to say what I have said that my own views may be placed on record.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say, and I do it chiefly because I think in respect of these appropriations there has seldom if ever been a division of the Senate, that from the beginning of my service here I have been in sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] in respect of these appropriations.

This proposition has quite as much merit, if indeed not more merit, in my judgment, than any one of those which have preceded it. While I have no desire to see the State of Massachusetts discriminated against in respect of this or any other measure, I have habitually opposed these appropriations and expect to oppose them. If this were a proposition to erect a monument in my own State I should actively and earnestly oppose it.

That is all I desire to say, simply to put myself right upon the record.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it is difficult for me to conceive of a civilized government without monuments. I can not comprehend a civilization of that kind, marking no place and perpetuating the memory of no one who has achieved great deeds. With the greatest possible respect for the sentiments which have just been uttered, they would reach a conclusion appalling to my mind; the Washington Monument would never have stood where it stands now, and all the things that the American people most cherish in and about this Capitol and elsewhere would not be here.

I can not understand the sentiment which would deny to Saratoga a monument to the great achievements there performed. I can not understand opposition to the Yorktown celebration, nor can I understand opposition to an appeal, not, as the Senator from Massachusetts well said, because his State needs this money, but an appeal to this Government to be represented in a monument at Plymouth Rock. The Senator from Massachusetts said correctly that it is not a matter of money; but looking back to the history of this country and all that has come from the event that this monument proposes to commemorate, it would seem strange to the student of history if the United States Government let pass such an opportunity to have some part in commemorating that great event which has done so much for the civilization of the world.

I know very well it is not necessary to make these remarks, but being upon the Committee on the Library, from which the bill emanates, I did not feel that it was right to remain silent while this measure seems to receive some opposition. I am quite sure that the Senators on this side of the Chamber who have expressed themselves are acting upon a general principle which does not exceptionally develop itself against a monument at Plymouth Rock. But whether their ideas apply to one measure or to all, I do not share them. I believe this Government is engaged in a noble work when it is adorning and perpetuating the places where human virtue has had its highest illustrations. I believe the time will come when the encampment at Valley Forge will be made a national park and kept as it is now with its lines of intrenchments and fortifications just as visible and as well defined as they were when Washington's suffering troops marched out of them; and I believe that in adorning and perpetuating these places we are teaching the generations who will come after us the wisest lessons possible; we are teaching them pages of splendid history. When the eye salutes a statue or a towering monument marking where men gave their lives for liberty, for justice, for law, it is an instruction which elevates and glorifies the nature of man and makes better citizens and wiser legislators.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

REPRINTING A BILL.

Mr. BLAIR. The print is exhausted of the bill (S. 1495) to limit ownership of lands now belonging to the public domain. I give notice to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] that I desire to move the bill as an amendment to the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad grant lands and for other purposes. I ask that the bill may be reprinted.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no objection to its being reprinted, but I do not desire to have that bill considered by the Senate without considering the bill of which I shall ask the consideration this morning.

Mr. ALLISON and others. You can not amend it.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not in order. I will say, which I presume will relieve my friend, that there were five or six pension cases omitted yesterday, against the passage of which, as far as I know, there is no objection. They were passed over because the papers were not in possession of the Chief Clerk. They are now in his possession, and I only wish to occupy the attention of the Senate while those bills are being disposed of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well, I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to say a word before the motion is put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands. This motion not being debatable, the Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent of the Senate to make some observations on the motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not desire to detain the Senate, and I certainly do not ask for any unreasonable delay in the consideration of this bill, but I am satisfied that it has not attracted the attention of the Senate at all. It is, however, I think, one of the most important bills that we are likely to discuss and dispose of. It is one which in its operation, as I believe, in its present form will practically sequestrate the land grants which have been made to the various corporations that have received those grants and have availed themselves of their credit for the construction of their several roads. Before a bill of that importance is disposed of it should be discussed at length.

I myself desire to offer several vitally important amendments, and I wish to discuss the main bill itself. My engagements have been such that I have found it entirely impossible to prepare myself in any suitable way for the discussion of the subject. I am confident that I am as well prepared as the Senate can be for its consideration, because I hardly think that the bill has as yet been considered outside of the committee at all.

The Senator from Nebraska was anxious to pass the bill yesterday without discussion, and I suppose he is in haste for its disposition now, but it concerns the action of the Government with the great transcontinental railways. During the last twenty years millions upon millions of money have been invested in them, very largely by those who live in the portion of the country which I come from myself. Much of it has already been lost for the development of the great West, and this bill is calculated to shake, as I think, in a great degree the public faith and public credit and to bring discredit upon the Government.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will allow me to do so, whether he thinks it proper to avail himself of the unanimous consent asked upon a motion to proceed to consider a bill to consume the time of the Senate in debating the merits of the proposition?

Mr. BLAIR. I am certainly giving my reasons why I think this bill ought not to be taken up, as I have a right to do by the unanimous consent of the Senate. I do not understand that I am pursuing a course at all unusual when a consent of this kind is given. I hope the Senate will not proceed at this time to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] to take up the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands.

The motion was agreed to.

OLD COUNTY JAIL PREMISES IN DUBUQUE.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill is read I ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield to me for a moment that I may call up for passage a bill which passed the House unanimously and is purely of a local character and will only take a moment to pass the Senate. It is Calendar number 415, House bill 4493. It is a unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4493) to amend the act of June 15, 1844, and for other purposes.

The preamble recites that by an act of Congress approved June 15, 1844, a grant was made to the county of Dubuque, Territory of Iowa, in the following words: "That the following-described pieces or parcels of land are hereby granted and given to the county of Dubuque, in the Territory of Iowa, to wit: Two lots and a half lying and being situate in the town of Dubuque, on the northwest corner of Seventh and Locust streets, in said county, being the same land upon which the old county jail now stands, and is designated on the Government plat of said town as 'public square;'" that through a clerical error, the jail lot or public square was described as being on the northwest corner of Seventh and Locust streets, when it was in fact on the northeast corner thereof; and that the county of Dubuque, under the powers conferred by the act, sold to John and Thomas Burton the tract situated on the northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets on which the old county jail stood, and designated on the Government plat of the town as "public square," the same being a rectangular tract fronting 114 feet on Seventh street and 127 feet and 11 inches on Locust street; but in the deed from the county to John and Thomas Burton the same clerical error was made as to the corner on which the tract was situated as was made in the act.

As curative of the error, the bill provides that the rectangular tract of land on the northeast corner of Seventh and Locust streets, in the city of Dubuque, fronting 114 feet on Seventh street, and 127 feet and 11 inches on Locust street, being the premises on which the old county jail formerly stood, and designated on the Government plat as "public square," shall be granted and the title thereto confirmed in and to the county of Dubuque, and its grantees, John and Thomas Burton, their heirs and assigns forever.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

EUNICE E. CLARK.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill to which I referred a while ago has been procured by the Secretary, and I should like to move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed yesterday and have it disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 414) granting a pension to Daniel B. Clark was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move now to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. Now I move to discharge the Committee on Pensions from the further consideration of House bill 6429, which is to give to the widow the pension that the bill just disposed of granted to the soldier.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator the cause of death?

Mr. CULLOM. I have not learned the facts. The man has recently died. I believe it was from paralysis, from which he was suffering for years.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator understand that the disease was the result of service?

Mr. CULLOM. The result of service. I have the report in my hand, which shows the facts.

There being no objection, the Committee on Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Eunice E. Clark, widow of Daniel B. Clark, late of Company A, First Ohio Cavalry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that reported just now? I should like to hear the report read.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask if the whole bill was read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I think the bill is very imperfect. Let it be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It does not specify what rate or according to the limitations of law.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know but that the bill ought to be amended. Let it be amended so as to give her the pension that the husband was given by the bill just disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will allow me. To cover everything let him say, "according to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual language is, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. NEECE in the House of Representatives April 6, 1886:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill No. 6429, having considered the same, report:

That this committee, on January 12, 1886, reported favorably on House bill 414, a bill to pension Daniel B. Clark, which bill has since passed this House and is now pending in the Senate; that since the passage of said bill 414 the said Daniel B. Clark has died from his disease, which was fairly traceable to his Army service. The said Eunice E. Clark being his wife, and who has nursed said soldier, who had been helpless for the last four years, requiring her entire time to care for him, your committee is of the opinion that she should be placed on the pension-roll, and therefore recommend that said bill do pass. Said report made on House bill 414 is hereby adopted and made a part hereof.

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 414, beg leave to submit the following report:

"Daniel B. Clark enlisted in Company A, First Regiment of Ohio Cavalry, and was discharged at Nashville, Tenn., for disability, September 17, 1864. He was a prisoner of war from August 29, 1862, to September 13, 1862. A pension is claimed for heart disease and piles contracted while a prisoner of war. The evidence is as follows: Simon Dorran, a private of the same company and regiment, and also a fellow-prisoner, testifies said Clark had diarrhea and piles while he was a prisoner of war. Capt. Noah Jones, who was the captain of Clark's company, also William P. Cleaveland, a member of said company, both testify that Clark, after he returned from prison, was unable to do duty on account of disease or disability, which disease they understood Clark contracted while a prisoner of war. Dr. Milton Dunlap, of Greenfield, Ohio, testified that he treated said Clark in 1862, but he can not now remember for what disease. It also appears that after Clark was a prisoner of war he returned to his home near Greenfield, Ohio, on furlough. John Blain testifies that Clark was a sound man at the time of enlistment; that he was at Clark's home in Ross County, Ohio, in 1862; that Clark was at home sick, and complained of pain in his breast, and that at that time Dr. Dunlap treated him.

"Dr. W. H. Wear testifies that he met said Clark in 1865, and had frequent talks with him about his trouble, and that Clark at the time was suffering from heart disease, pleuritis, and piles; and that since 1872 he has been said Clark's family physician, and has treated him for said diseases, and that said diseases still continue, and that said Clark is totally disabled. Doctor McDavitt testifies that he treated said Clark in 1880 for heart disease and pleuritis. Doctor Compton says he knows said Clark, and that he treated him since 1872 frequently for heart disease and piles.

"Dr. A. F. Eidson testifies that he treated said Clark from August, 1865, to April, 1871, for heart disease and piles. The board of medical examiners who examined him in 1881 say he is totally disabled from the effects of heart disease and piles. A number of witnesses testify to Clark's soundness at the time of his enlistment, and to his being sick ever since he was a prisoner of war. Evidence introduced before the committee show said Clark to be totally disabled at this time, confined to his bed or invalid chair, and unable to walk, or to talk so he can be understood without great difficulty.

"Your committee recommend that said bill do pass with the following amendment:

"Strike out the words 'at the rate of thirty dollars per month' and insert 'subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.'"

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I should like to hear the bill read to see whether it is in such a form that the poor woman will get anything.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It appears—and I speak for inquiry—that under the limitations and provisions of the pension laws her husband in his lifetime was not entitled to a pension, because he did not come within the strict provisions of the pension laws on the evidence. Now therefore it is not like the case of a widow of a soldier who died from wounds or disease contracted in the service, but it is the widow of a private citizen who had been a soldier, as I understand it, and therefore I am afraid if you leave it as it is now that the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury will not pay her anything. I think the sum ought to be stated, for safety.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the universal form, but it will do no harm to state the sum if it seems better to the Senator from Vermont. I suppose five thousand bills have passed in precisely the same form since the war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is manifest on the face of the bill that as the husband himself would not have been entitled to a pension, the widow will not get the pension as it now stands.

Mr. CULLOM. I was inclined to fear that myself. I will move to insert "at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. BLAIR. The rank of the officer was captain. As the bill now stands she would get pension at the rate of $20 per month. I hope the Senator will not amend it so as to reduce the amount.

Mr. CULLOM. I supposed he was a private soldier. I move to make the rate $20 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert before the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law" the words "at the rate of $20 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill is of sufficient importance to require some explanation. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will give us a brief explanation, at least, of what is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The question presented in this bill has been the subject of consideration by Congress for many years. In the Forty-seventh Congress bills for this purpose were introduced in both branches, and in one branch not only reported favorably, but I think passed. In the Forty-eighth Congress action was taken by both Houses, and in the Senate a favorable report was made upon the subject and the bill was made a special order and was placed upon the Calendar and was subject to consideration, and was the next bill in order at the time of the expiration of the Forty-eighth Congress. In this, the Forty-ninth Congress, bills were introduced in both Houses, and the other House has already passed a bill upon the subject, not the same bill as this, but a bill to reach this object, the taxation of unpatented railroad lands.

The Committee on Public Lands, having had several bills under consideration, after an ample and full discussion reported the bill now under consideration.

So it is not correct, as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] has said, to suppose that this matter has not been considered by Congress, when in the Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, and Forty-ninth Congresses it has been considered. It has not only been considered during that time by Congress, but it has been considered by the people of the United States for many years before that time; and the non-action of Congress has been a marvel, only explainable by reason of that subtile and mysterious influence which has so often controlled subjects of this kind. It has been a matter of deep concern and consideration and mystery on the part of the American people that railroad companies should hold undisputed title to millions of acres and yet be exempt from taxation, and not only themselves exempt from taxation, but actually allowed to sell the lands to which for years they had title, and as a consideration for a greater price say to the purchasers, "These lands for years shall be exempt from taxation," and why? Because, unfortunately, in the early history of railroad-grant legislation it was provided that the railroad companies should not obtain patents for the lands granted until they had paid the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands. Instead of being a burden to the railroad companies, it was a great benefit to them, because while under the previous acts the companies might have been compelled to take their patents by the existing provision, railroad companies are not forced to take their patents, and all they have to do is to remain quiet and refuse to pay the two or three cents per acre required by the law, and still be in the undisturbed possession, mortgage the lands, sell them in the market, the purchasers receiving the same benefit that the companies were entitled to until the railroad companies take their patents, which will be in their discretion, when they can do it conveniently.

The question is now to remedy this great evil. The proposition of the House of Representatives is confined, as some of the propositions in this body were, to the roads organized in 1862, extending across the State of Iowa, known as the Union and Central Pacific Railroads. There is no reason why the same provision should not extend to all the land-grant roads. Therefore it is that the committee of the Senate adopted a bill providing that this principle should extend to all railroad companies having land grants from the United States, and that only such lands should be taxed as are conterminous to the finished road, not going beyond it, and that only such lands should be taxed as lie in organized counties, so that all possible rights are secured to the railroad companies.

I do not understand the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire when he says that this bill is confiscation. No confiscation follows. If property is used, it is only asked that it shall be subject to the same rate of taxation at the same valuation as the land of individuals, nothing more.

Mr. President, I do not deeem it necessary to say anything further on this subject. I believe I have explained why and how this difficulty originated which we seek to remedy, that the remedy is merely subjecting the property of railroad companies to taxation as the property of a citizen, no more, and we trust it will be no less.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will allow me a moment more. I desire to say that in the same connection I shall ask the consideration of the House bill to which I have referred in order that the Senate bill may be adopted as a substitute for the House bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the discussion of this matter by the Senator from Nebraska would seem to indicate that it is one of very trifling importance, and that the astonishment must be that the bill was not enacted years ago rather than at this late day it should be subjected to even the slightest criticism.

There is a certain superficial appearance of propriety in the Senator's suggestion that the lands of these corporations held under grants from the General Government should be subjected to taxation, because the lands of individuals holding from the Government whenever the title passes from the Government to individuals are subjected to that burden. But I believe that a little thought on this point will indicate how slight is the real substance of it.

The great mass of these lands to-day are in precisely the same condition as are the sections of land still remaining a portion of the public domain; and no human being can suggest any reason why the local communities just being initiated should have the general and indefinite power of taxation upon these railroad lands unless they should also be allowed the same unlimited right of taxation upon the public lands with which they are connected, being of precisely the same general character.

Only a few years ago the entire national domain west of the Mississippi River, with a very few exceptions, was a vast waste, unimproved, almost uninhabited by man, and if inhabited, by reason of the lack of transportation, almost inaccessible; and we all remember how the circumstances of the war made it almost imperative upon the Government that we should establish by land immediate connection with our Western possessions. We remember how the great European powers threatened an alliance with the confederacy and were likely by their maritime supremacy to take from us the Pacific coast. That stimulated and resulted in the construction of the first great transcontinental line of railroad. All the way from its eastern terminus to the Pacific coast, as we all remember, it was in a comparatively uninhabited country. It was over public land, a portion of the public domain, all of which was subject to disposition at the rate of $1.25 per acre, but there was nobody to take possession of it. It was unimproved property; it yielded no income, and was a source of benefit to nobody, to the nation or to individuals, and it was of course not subject to any taxation. No principle upon which taxation could be levied on property at all was applicable to this vast portion of the national domain. Before the necessary connection could be made with the Pacific coast, by which this territory could be preserved as an integral part of the Union at large, it was necessary that either by public expenditure imposed upon the entire country, all the property of the entire country, or by the encouragement of private capital, this vast region should be traversed by some form of communication, and the only available form was by way of railroad transportation. The Government elected, and I presume every one believes elected wisely, that its first route of transportation—and the same was continued further on—should be stimulated and encouraged in its construction by inviting private capital; and the land grant adjoining the line of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroad was made for that purpose. On the strength of the land grant as a security money was raised with which the railroad was constructed. The same plan was adopted with regard to the Northern Pacific Railroad, the same with the Atlantic and Pacific now in process of construction. The great line by way of New Orleans, Texas, and the Southern Territories to San Francisco and to other points on the Pacific coast was encouraged in its construction and the construction was accomplished by the same pledge of a portion of the public lands.

These corporations were authorized necessarily to place the lands granted them as security, and those securities were sold on the market, and thus capital was obtained with which the roads themselves were built. Until recently, until these roads were substantially constructed, until every incumbrance was created upon the land grants connected with all these lines of communication, until these incumbrances were fastened upon the grants and money had been raised on the faith thereof, I venture to say that no human being ever heard a suggestion that these lands were under any circumstances, so long as the title remained in the corporations, at least, to be subject to Federal or to State taxation. In that way the public faith became pledged, as I think, to the corporations, to the assignees of the corporations, to the bondholders, to the persons interested in the various companies' mortgages—pledged that the security of the lands should be available for the discharge of these incumbrances without subjection to local taxation or State taxation so long as the lands remained in the legal possession of the corporations themselves.

In regard to one great transcontinental railroad, as is known by the Senate, the country itself has taken a very heavy pecuniary liability—is practically liable for the first mortgage of the company, as well as for its own bonds issued to the company. Under these circumstances this bill now comes to the front, and it proposes to take all these land grants, whether their value has been enhanced by the improvement which results from the construction of the roads or not, and to subject all these land grants indiscriminately to an undefined and unrestrained power of local taxation.

What may be the motive behind this every Senator is at liberty, of course, to surmise for himself. It must be seen that whatsoever value there is to these grants has been placed there by the enlistment of capital obtained in the way I have spoken of.

It is also an apparent and undisputed fact that a very large proportion, much the larger proportion, of all these lands are as yet practically out of the market. It is known to be the fact that it is the policy of every one of these great roads to dispose of the land grant as rapidly as it possibly can and make the proceeds of the sections disposed of available in the discharge of the land-grant bonds. That is the general policy pursued by these companies, and so far as I know there is but a very slight danger of abuse in this direction on the part of any of the companies. So there is not any general complaint, there is no cause of general complaint, existing of the character which the Senator from Nebraska has adduced before the Senate.

It was shown before the committee in evidence or in citations from the public records of the country, from the reports of the Land Office, and from other reliable sources, that the Central Pacific Railroad, which is one largely affected by this bill, has been clamoring for years for the conveyance of its land grant more rapidly than it could receive it from the General Government, and that it has made its deposits rather in excess of the actual charge for the surveying and selection and conveyance of lands. It is in no imaginable sense under any default in this regard; nor has the Government, so far as I know or believe, any serious right of complaint in regard to any of these corporations for any delinquency in their having advanced the necessary funds to defray the slight expenses of surveying, of selection, and of conveyance to the companies.

These delays have arisen from various causes. Almost universally the causes have been owing to the lack of a sufficient working force in the land offices to transact the necessary business, and many delays have arisen by reason of the further fact that serious questions have arisen as to the character of the lands to be conveyed under the land grants themselves. It will be remembered that the Government reserved to itself all mineral lands, reserved from the operation of the grants all lands where rights by homestead or pre-emption had been initiated. In some other cases there were reservations, and the land grants were not operative where these conditions existed.

Now, the question whether land is of a mineral character or not, and so is or is not conveyed by the grant, has been in many instances one that has led to protracted disputes, and vast masses of land have as yet not been conveyed to the companies although all the conditions have been complied with on the part of the companies, for the reason that the United States has not yet been able to say whether those lands were properly selected or not on the part of the companies. So generally the fact that the lands have not been conveyed more rapidly is not the fault of the companies, but it is a fault inherent in the nature of things because of controversies arising by reason of these reservations in the original grants.

Now, sir, let us consider this matter a little more closely. I have alluded to the fact that this vast extent of country was valueless to the General Government, valueless save as a portion of the earth itself to the people of the United States without development, and without development such as is dependent on lines of transportation. I have alluded to the further fact that the great mass of this country still remains in its original condition, practically public land not as yet marketable, purchasers not there, purchasers not available, as valueless to the companies to-day as it was when the original grants were made for the realization of money to pay taxes or pay bonds, valuable only as it is a pledge of faith, a security for the future. The whole policy of the Government was based on the idea that these companies were to hold the lands, that they were to be subject to no burdens in the way of taxation, either national or State, until such period of time as they should be able to find a market for them so that they might realize something from them themselves.

I am anxious that this bill shall be so framed that whenever it is shown that by reason of the construction of these roads and the disposition of adjoining or adjacent property to settlers, the value of the land is enhanced beyond the price fixed by the Government, that is, $2.50 an acre, at which the companies are allowed to sell their lands, whenever there has been an increase of valuation beyond that sum, at which it must be held by the railroad until it can be disposed of at that rate, whenever there is a creation of values beyond that $2.50 an acre, it should be taxed, and I would be glad to support such an amendment. Indeed I will offer an amendment to this bill that shall make any valuation by a proper tribunal beyond the $2.50 an acre subject to taxation in behalf of the State or Territory or the local community; but anything beyond that, I think, would be a violation of the public faith, and a thing which ought not to be done.

The Senator from Nebraska found some fault with my expression that this bill proposes a practical sequestration of these public lands. Why is it not a sequestration? Wherever the companies are able to sell, almost without exception they sell at the price limited by law already. As I stated, the bill should be amended, and I do not suppose there will be any objection anywhere that the bill should be amended so that any excessive valuation of lands not disposed of should be subject to taxation; but the great mass of this land can not be sold as yet. Under the stimulus of the utmost effort of the corporations to increase settlement they have been unable to sell these lands. Now, suppose that they are subject to taxation as the bill proposes, that they are subjected to taxation according to the will of the local community in an organized county. The Senator talks as though the fact that the bill restricts this taxation to such communities as have been legally organized was a protection. The Senator knows even better than I, for he lives there, that these Territories are already almost universally organized into counties. What is the first thing done in a Territory as inhabitants gather? Any dozen or fifteen inhabitants petition for the organization of a county, have their limits defined by the local Legislature, and the first thing they do after they have perfected their county organization is to locate the county seat. They proceed next to provide for the erection of expensive public buildings, and they issue their bonds, and they make all the land included in the county by virtue of local laws subject to the taxation necessary to construct these buildings and to discharge other debts of the local community. The worst frauds we have heard of in the Territory of Dakota and in other Territories have grown out of this action, legal in form but vicious and hurtful and fraudulent in practice, on account of these county organizations. And the Senator proposes that these land grants, not in the States to be sure, where the ordinary processes of the law and the ordinary methods of procedure would be likely to be more equitable, but throughout the Territories, where the great mass of these lands lie, land grants owned by corporations and individuals living at a great distance, having no part in local action, shall be subjected to such impositions as the local communities may see fit to place upon them.

Take this idea in connection with the abuses which we know have hitherto existed and been perpetrated time and time again by these county organizations upon the property in which others were interested as well as themselves locally, what would be likely to be their course of action in the imposition of taxes for the purpose of actually sequestrating these vast tracts of land which as yet the companies can not dispose of under any circumstances? Any one can see that these corporations will be taken at the utmost disadvantage.

I think it is proper to state here in connection with the imposition likely to be placed upon them the probable fact, which is a public fact, that nearly all these corporations to-day have great difficulty in paying their running expenses, to say nothing of any income on the stock of the corporations. Take the Northern Pacific Railroad, for instance, which has now reached Puget Sound, with the exception of some 25 miles I believe of the main line. The main line is now 2,400 or 2,500 miles in length. That corporation, if I recollect aright, after paying its running expenses and after discharging the interest on its bonds, had remaining for distribution only $100,000 last year. Take that as an illustration of the operation of this act generally. They have $100,000, say, remaining which should be available for dividends to the stockholders after paying running expenses and interest on bonds. If their lands, their grant amounting I think to nearly 50,000,000 acres, of which I suppose not more than one-fifth, probably not one-fifth, has been disposed of—if the 40,000,000 acres remaining are subject to local taxation under the provisions of this bill, what will be the effect? I have not had time, as I stated earlier when I asked a little delay, to make a calculation with sufficient accuracy so that I can say to the Senate just what would be the effect of taxation upon the 40,000,000 acres of the land grant of the Northern Pacific; but we will suppose that the land is valued by the local communities at the sum which the United States valued it at and at which it is required to be sold, $2.50 an acre, and if the tax imposed should be no more than 2 mills on the hundred dollars of value it will be found that the actual taxation imposed upon that road from year to year would not be less than half a million dollars. At all events the amount of taxation would be largely in excess of the surplus remaining to the corporation after paying running expenses and the fixed charges on its bonds.

Suppose these lands are taxed at the local valuation to the amount of a half million dollars a year—and in all human probability it would exceed that sum—how is the corporation to pay it? The result would be that the very first year the company would be bankrupt, unless the bondholders, unless outside parties or the Government itself interested in the matter, saw fit to raise the money, or the corporation itself should increase its charges for transportation of freight and passengers, so that the whole community would virtually pay the taxation. The result would be that the very first year every acre of this vast land grant would be confiscated under the power of local taxation, and confiscated in the interest of whom?

The complaint is that these vast tracts of land are now locked up in the hands of these corporations. Who is to appear at the tax sales and bid off these lands? The corporation is not able to do it. Individuals resident in all parts of the country would appear at these sales and would obtain the title to the lands; capitalists, land-grabbers, and speculators from all parts of the country would find under the practical operation of this bill a perfect bonanza; and if a man were at liberty to surmise motives and to point out the direction from which this bill may possibly have come, he would be justified, I think, in suggesting that this is a bill in the interest not of the people locally, not of the corporations, not of the Government, but of individuals—wealthy individuals who desire through its provisions to accumulate in themselves the ownership of these vast tracts of land; for you will observe, Mr. President, that under this tax title all other sorts of title are cut off, and these lands will inevitably become vested in comparatively a few individuals—it may be in great syndicates of capitalists—and we shall therefore have parted with all claim upon these lands and have vested substantially in these individuals the enormous amounts of lands, coming, as I recollect, in all to nearly 200,000,000 acres, in men who are likely to use them simply for speculative purposes.

I know a little of the operation of this sort of thing in my own State. To be sure, there is not a great deal of land there, but what there is is of some account to us. The time is rapidly coming in this country when land, even in the smallest quantities, is to be of great consequence to the individual here in the United States. The individual non-resident landholder is the worst form of hindrance that there is to the development of any country. It is from him and his ownership that are developed all the evils of what is called landlordism abroad, and it is from him that we have to apprehend precisely the same evils, and they are rapidly developing already in our own country.

I think the Senate should pause and the country should pause and consider whether, even in the interest of "the dear people" themselves, it is not worth while to examine more carefully into the provisions and the unavoidable results of this bill. The Senator from Nebraska is himself a very considerable land-holder and himself a gentleman of wealth. I wish he were present to tell us how much he is interested or will be likely to be interested in the practical working and results of this bill. I insist that it should be ascertained how many heavy capitalists in all parts of the country are interested in the practical operations of this bill and the confiscation of these land grants for the benefit of wealthy individuals. I wish that could be ascertained exactly. If it could be and the masses of the people of this country came to understand the land-grant question as it is and not as it is put by designing men who are behind this agitation and robbery as I believe—if the masses of the people came to understand, as they will understand when the bill gets into operation, that the effect, to say nothing of the motive, is to lock up these lands interminably in the hands of speculators and land sharks, they would hold Congress, they would hold the whole Government, hereafter to a more rigid accountability than we are at present apprehending.

I do not want to take a great deal of time; it is nearly 2 o'clock, when I suppose another order of business will be before the Senate; but I desire before this bill is disposed of to offer sundry amendments, and in order that they may be printed and taken under the consideration of the Senate, I will now read them during the few moments of time which are remaining before 2 o'clock.

I wish all the public lands now remaining in the United States to be subjected to provisions that shall forever insure them to small individual owners. I am persuaded that there is a tendency in this country, which is illustrated by alarming facts, to the accumulation of the land, which is the liberty of the people, in the hands of comparatively few individuals. We find these illustrations in the States. The evil is developing enormously in the Territories through the public lands outside these grants. I some time since introduced and had referred to the Committee on Public Lands a bill the provisions of which I propose to attach to the one under discussion as an amendment.

SEC. —. That no natural person or persons or partnership shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own, either by virtue of the laws relating to the disposition of the public lands, or by grant, assignment, purchase, descent, or by any other method by which title to land may be acquired, more than 320 acres of agricultural lands nor more than 640 acres of any description of lands which shall belong to the public domain, on or after the passage of this act; and hereafter all patents and evidences of title to any portion of the public domain to which this act shall apply shall recite the provisions hereof.

SEC. —. That all lands acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by due process of law.

Of course, Mr. President, where the title has already been parted with and vested in individuals, it is impossible for the Government to exercise any control over it save by the power of taxation. It has become a vested right. All the force of the country, moral force and physical force, must be and always will be concentrated for the protection of vested rights in this country or in any country subject to the government of law. But the provisions which I propose to offer as an amendment to this bill are wider than simply the land grants concerned. They cover the entire public domain and will insure to our population in all time to come these small holdings which are indispensable to the vigorous, hardy yeomanry which is the surest defense of a State.

A provision of that kind of course can not reach the land grants themselves, and so I desire that other amendments may be made to the bill so as to reach the land grants in case they are to be sequestrated or in any way are to be eliminated from their present control and pass to that of individuals. I will not undertake to state now the amendment on that point, because that will have to be determined as the bill is discussed and as amendments are offered. But before the bill is passed I shall desire to offer this amendment:

Tax titles derived under this act shall be subject to any valid mortgage made by authority of the United States prior to the passage of this act.

I think anything like due consideration of the public faith requires that the mortgages already made, by virtue of which the money was obtained that built the roads and made the adjoining sections available at all, that created the local communities whom it is now proposed to endow with this power of confiscation—that those mortgages, those incumbrances should be protected as against the imposition of taxes under the provisions of this bill. I desire also to offer the following amendment:

The power of taxation on the part of the State or Territory exercised by virtue of the provisions of this act shall apply only to a just valuation of the land as compared with other like property adjacent thereto and in excess of $2.50 per acre, the price fixed for the adjacent sections of the public lands.

I have adverted very briefly to the reasons which will induce me to offer that amendment. I desire also to offer this further amendment:

The provisions of this act shall not apply to sections of land which do not lie adjacent to other sections of land actually occupied and improved, or to sections of land entry upon which has been made under the land laws of the United States.

The principle involved in this amendment I have adverted to, and it is this: That the lands must not be subjected to taxation until there is improvement by virtue of the grant itself, the building up of the community which results from the grant itself. Where there has been such improvement, the Government lands will be likely to have been occupied, as they have been occupied, and there is for that reason increased valuation; there let the land of the railroad corporation be subjected to taxation like that of the individual who is improving his land, because in such case there is undoubtedly an enhancement of value beyond the $2.50 per acre and the corporation should be held subject to taxation for that; but nothing should be done to encourage the corporation in withholding the land from market for the purpose of a future rise. They ought to sell it to individuals and for the improvement of the community, as rapidly as that can be done, at $2.50 per acre.

I also desire to offer the following proviso, to be inserted at the proper place:

That in any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a purchaser, and in such case the land sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as now provided by the laws relating thereto.

Under the provisions of this bill the United States will be no purchaser, land-grabbers will get every acre, and it will be in a much worse condition so far as the public——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will please suspend. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to read my amendment. I will make no comment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to offer an amendment and have it read.

Mr. BLAIR. Is not the Senator willing I shall put in mine in connection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to add this proviso:

That the valuation of this land on which the same shall be subjected to taxation shall be subject to revision by the Secretary of the Interior.

I also propose the following amendment:

That under the provisions of this act no individual purchaser shall acquire more than 160 acres of land, nor shall any of the land so disposed of ever be sold in larger parcels than 160 acres unless the same shall be used for agricultural purposes.

The other amendments make the amount 320 in one case, and in cases of pasture land 640. I shall also offer this amendment:

The provisions of this act shall apply only to lands within the jurisdiction of a State and not to lands within any of the Territories.

Mr. TELLER. I move that all these amendments be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to now offer, before this bill goes over, an amendment, which I send to the desk, to come after the word "provide," in line 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 12 of section 1, after the word "provide," it is proposed to insert:

And to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect of such lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will be the pending question.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment in line 4. It may not be necessary on a further explanation of the bill. I propose to insert, after the word "taxation," the words "hereafter levied."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] gives notice of another amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I give notice that I shall ask for the consideration of this bill on the next legislative day, on Monday morning.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not desire to address the Senate to-day, as the bill now before the Senate for consideration has been three times read I believe and is before the Senate for amendment. I have explained the provisions of the bill as far as I was able to do so a few days ago, and do not care to make any further remarks upon it at present.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe a number of amendments have been proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None of the amendments of which notice has been given have been proposed.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to have the amendments read which I submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which amendment does the Senator offer?

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to have them all read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That no person or corporation shall have authority to engage in interstate commerce, after three months from the passage of this act, without having procured a license for that purpose from the board of commissioners herein provided; and one of the conditions of such license shall be the acceptance of this act by such person or corporation, and of such regulations as said board may lawfully make in pursuance thereof. And where any route over which interstate commerce shall be carried between the several States and Territories of the United States includes as a part thereof a railway or water route outside of the United States, no license shall issue for the transportation of interstate commerce over such route unless the railway company or companies controlling the portions of such route situated within the United States become responsible for and guarantee the observance by those controlling the portion of the route outside thereof of the terms and conditions of such license. And when any transportation company or companies shall carry traffic between any points over a route or routes located entirely within one State, in competition with other companies whose lines between said points are located in more than one State, such company shall, as a condition precedent to the granting of such license, agree to establish the rates between such points, and post schedules thereof, in the manner prescribed in and be subject to the provisions of the fifth section of this act. Such license shall be renewable each year, and may be suspended by the said board for cause, after full hearing, and upon the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction may be revoked by the said board for a violation of its terms or of the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey offers the amendment which has been read.

Mr. CULLOM. I understood that the Secretary was to read all the Senator's amendments for information. Which amendment is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Only one amendment can be offered at a time. The one pending is that just read.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from New Jersey. I see that he uses in line 4 of his amendment the language "the board of commissioners," and in several other places "the board," but the word used all through the bill is "commission." I think he ought to change his amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I will put it in that form and I will substitute the amendment I now send up for the one offered, which conforms to the language used in the bill generally.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator had better withdraw the amendment already offered.

Mr. SEWELL. I will substitute this for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the amendment which has been read and offers a modified amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to insert after section 5, as a new section, and change the numbers of succeeding sections accordingly, the following:

SEC. 6. That from and after ninety days after this act shall take effect it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of this act, to engage in the transportation of passengers or property without having first procured from the commission established by this act a license authorizing such carrier to engage in such transportation, and one of the conditions of such license shall be the acceptance of this act by such common carrier and of such regulations as said commission may lawfully make in pursuance thereof. And where any route over which traffic shall be carried between the several States and Territories of the United States includes as a part thereof a railway or water route outside of the United States, no license shall issue for the transportation of passengers or property over such route unless the common carrier or carriers controlling the portions of such route situated within the United States become responsible for and guarantee the observance by those controlling the portion of the route outside thereof of the terms and conditions of such license. And when any common carrier or carriers shall carry traffic between any points over a route or routes located entirely within one State in competition with other companies whose lines between said points are located in more than one State, such carrier or carriers shall, as a condition precedent to the granting of such license, agree to establish and publish the rates between such points in the manner prescribed in, and be subject to all the provisions of, the fifth section of this act. All licenses issued shall be renewable each year, and may be suspended by the said commission for cause after full hearing, and upon the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction may be revoked by the said commission for a violation of its terms or of the provisions of this act.

Mr. SEWELL. The changes between that and the amendment I first offered are simply to conform to the language used in the bill, changing "corporation" to "common carrier," and matters of that kind. The general scope of the amendment is to bring within the provisions of the act railroad lines that traverse Canada in competition with our lines running east and west, without which an act of this kind would be burdensome on the interstate commerce of our routes. We should be left at the mercy of competition by Canadian lines if they were not governed by our laws, as they would not be without the adoption of this amendment. If the bill were passed as it is, it would tie the hands of our great lines running east and west under the charters of our States, and surrender the field to the Canadian lines.

In addition to that, this amendment would bring within the provisions of this interstate-commerce act as proposed the lines that run through one State in competition with lines that run through two or three States to the same point. I will give the instance of the New York Central running to a point on the lakes, both its starting-point and its terminus being within one State. It would not be within the provisions of the act without this amendment. There are lines running through New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania to and from the same points which come within the provisions of the act. That would be one instance where it would work to the disadvantage of the general railroad interests of the country. The New York line would be governed by the State law, while the lines running through New Jersey and other States would be governed by the interstate-commerce act of Congress. I submit that it would be a great injustice to those lines to oblige them to come under this act, and leave the line running in one State to be perfectly free to act in the matter of competition, in the matter of rates, and in the changes of their schedules as they saw fit.

Mr. INGALLS. Is this amendment in print?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been somewhat modified, but the original is in print. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. MILLER. I suggest that this amendment lie over and be printed. Undoubtedly there will be another day for this bill. I confess I do not entirely understand the scope of the amendment. Certainly the case cited by the Senator as to a road in New York running from New York city to the lakes is not exactly correct, because the bill as it now stands controls the transportation of all interstate commerce wherever the railroad company connects with or forms a continuous line to another State, or where part of it is by rail and part of it by water. So any New York line connecting with a line of steamers upon the lakes would come directly under the provisions of the bill as it now stands, and it is not subject to the objection presented by the Senator.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from New York fails to understand my explanation. There are some lines that run through one State to a given point, while another line reaching the same competing point runs through two or three States. The latter would come under the provisions of this interstate-commerce bill, while the line running through one State would not come under the provisions of the bill without this amendment.

Mr. MILLER. May I ask the Senator a question? Is it possible that Congress can legislate upon a line confined entirely to the limits of one State for the business upon that line not going any farther or connected with any line beyond it? If the object of the amendment is to produce that result, it seems to me that it should have a good deal of consideration before Congress shall undertake to assume any such authority as that. If the amendment proposes to do that thing, it had better be considered very carefully by the Senate before it acts upon it, or it had better reject it at the start.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If this amendment is to go over and be printed, I desire to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). An amendment to the pending amendment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No, sir, an amendment to the bill, so that it can be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota proposes an amendment which he asks to have printed. That order will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to insert after the word "lake," in line 13 of section 4, the words:

Or by a parallel railroad not within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] is exactly the printed amendment that is upon the tables of the Senators, except that as now presented it is amended to conform in the use of terms with the other provisions of the bill. So I think there is no difficulty in Senators seeing what the amendment means without having any delay on account of it. I would like to proceed with the consideration of this bill and dispose of amendments either by rejecting them or adopting them as rapidly as a proper consideration of them will justify. If we are going to call up these amendments now and have them printed and laid over, substantially we adjourn the consideration of the subject.

Mr. MILLER. I do not desire to make any request that the bill be postponed or that the amendments lie over. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared as one of the committee to meet them now. If the Senator from New Jersey thinks his amendment is one of great importance and should be acted on, it certainly can not be acted on intelligently by the body at this time. It is not understood by the Senate at all.

Mr. CULLOM. I will make another suggestion, if the Senator from New York will allow me. If this amendment should be adopted at all, it would be an entirely new section. It can be put in the bill, if the Senate sees proper to put it in, at some future stage of the consideration of the bill as well as at present.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him if this amendment has received the consideration of the committee?

Mr. CULLOM. This amendment substantially was before the committed and rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I understand this amendment is here with an adverse report from the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I state the simple truth.

Mr. INGALLS. I mean has it been reported upon by the committee to the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. The committee simply considered the amendment, or the substance of it, and rejected it.

Mr. INGALLS. In committee?

Mr. CULLOM. In committee.

Mr. INGALLS. And reported it to the Senate rejected?

Mr. CULLOM. And reported the bill without any such provision in it. The bill now before the Senate for consideration does not contain such a provision.

Mr. INGALLS. Did the bill as originally introduced contain a provision similar in terms to this?

Mr. CULLOM. The proposition was originally before the committee and was considered by the committee and rejected, if I may be allowed to refer to what was done in committee.

I desire to indicate again that if there is any hesitation in reference to the consideration of this provision to-day, it will form, if adopted, an entirely new section, and can be considered at a future time if the bill is not disposed of to-day, so that we may go on now with the consideration of the bill as it stands.

Mr. INGALLS. Will not the Senator be good enough, as this matter has been considered by the committee of which he is chairman, to state the grounds upon which it was adversely considered by the committee?

Mr. CULLOM. The committee did not believe that such a provision was practicable and that it could be put into execution within any reasonable time. Therefore the committee believed that as this was an initiatory measure, the first bill proposing to regulate interstate transportation, we ought not to undertake to incorporate all the provisions which anybody might think were necessary in order to make a perfect bill.

So far as I am individually concerned, I will take the liberty of saying that I was inclined to believe that if such a provision could be executed it might be of public utility, in the light of what the Senator from New Jersey suggests, so that the roads running through Canada should not get any advantage on account of our attempt to regulate interstate commerce in the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask the Senator upon what ground in the opinion of the committee it could be claimed that Congress could exercise jurisdiction over a railroad both of whose termini were within the limits of a State?

Mr. CULLOM. The committee has not undertaken to exercise any such jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLER. I will suggest to the chairman that that portion of the amendment certainly never was considered by the committee favorably, or, as I understand, by any member of the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all, so far as that feature of it is concerned. The only subject that was considered by the committee in connection with the license question was in view of the fact, taking the Grand Trunk road for instance, which begins in Chicago, runs to the Detroit River, then runs through Canada, and then down to Portland, Me., whether there ought not to be some provision which would require license at the ends of the road in the United States to do interstate business, so that when a through bill of lading was issued at Chicago by the Grand Trunk Railroad for goods to be shipped to Portland, running through Canada, whether by such a provision we could not get control of that through bill of lading so as to take away the advantage which a Canadian road would have over an American road in case there was no such legislation enacted.

Mr. ALLISON. Did the committee decide that Congress could take no note of these foreign corporations acting in connection with our own roads?

Mr. CULLOM. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no provision in the bill relating to that subject?

Mr. CULLOM. Not any further than will be found in the first section of the bill in undertaking to regulate foreign commerce so far as interstate shipments by rail are concerned, which is mentioned in the first section of the bill.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator from Illinois state to the Senate that he expects a through line on our side to compete with a Canadian line unless we have some control over the termini of that line? How is it possible with a line in the center giving rebates and drawbacks which you wish to govern by this bill for the lines chartered by our States running parallel to compete for our interstate business?

Mr. CULLOM. It is pretty difficult to control a road in a foreign country, I admit, and it may be that there is no possible legislation which will accomplish that end; but I am not inclined to believe there is that danger to American commerce resulting from the fact that there is a Canada road which very many interested in railroad operations here believe will underbid our lines. So far as I am concerned I am anxious to throw around the American roads all possible safeguards that we can consistently enforce to protect them from injury while we are regulating them, knowing the fact that there are roads outside of this country for which we can not legislate. I do not know myself, even if we should adopt a license system, whether after that were done it would be possible to control shipments going through Canada so that the shippers might not if they desired to do it get some advantage; but the committee thought that while there might be some merit in this amendment, yet there are fifteen hundred railroads in this country, and that if we undertake to start the operation of this law by a system of licensing all the roads in this country it would be probably another year before we could get ready to operate under the law at all; so that the judgment of the committee was that it would be impolitic to insert such a provision in the bill at this time.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to this amendment. Without thoroughly understanding its provisions, it seems to me the amendment may be made to control almost every water communication for the transportation of freight in the United States. That is probably its object. The Senator from New Jersey undoubtedly desires to throw on all-rail routes the immense products of the West and compel shipments to go through the magnificent State of New Jersey, whether the shippers will or not. That is a very commendable object for the Senator from New Jersey. Unfortunately for New Jersey the dimensions of the State were made originally so small that there are other ways of getting from the great West to the great East without going through New Jersey.

All here will bear witness to the fact, every man who has thought at all upon the subject or has traveled a little must say, that wherever New Jersey could control any traffic or any passenger fare through that State, it has laid its mailed hand upon the people and compelled contributions to the State of New Jersey to carry on its government, feed its paupers, educate its people, and do all by charging contributions upon men, women, and children passengers. All the human family who have been happy enough to travel through that delightful region of the universe New Jersey used to pay tribute to New Jersey for all possible and conceivable objects of State government. They ran along for years charging a dollar a head for going through that paradise of the world, I do not know but more, on any railroad. If a foot-passenger had to cross a bridge that belonged to a railroad company, he had to pay his dollar to the railroad company for the benefit of the State or else go around several miles in that delectable State, and he must either ford the stream if fordable, swim across it if he were a swimmer, drown if he attempted it without being a swimmer, or pay his dollar to the railroad company for the benefit of the State.

Within the limited and comparatively well-known dimensions of the State of New Jersey, stretching as it does, unfortunately for the rest of the people of the United States, north and south so that we must go through part of it or go around a good deal of it, I would be perfectly willing that the State of New Jersey should control its own railroads, arrange its own freights, impose its own fares, tax passengers or tax articles of commerce and production even from the West, from my own State, that go through it, without let or hinderance, because in the dispensations of Divine Providence it was thought expedient to have some other outlet to the rest of the world that could be made available outside of New Jersey. In regard to such subjects as this the only redeeming thing there is about New Jersey is that it does not swell to such magnificent proportions as to compel everybody to go through it.

I speak with all respect for old New Jersey, the home of my ancestors. By all the associations of kindred and ancestry and old home residence I should be glad to join the Senator from New Jersey in his attack upon all the great and beneficial industries and communications and transportations of all the vast country lying to the west if I could do it without such detriment and such injury to the interest of every producer, of every shipper, of every consumer of the United States and in the markets of the world as could possibly be borne at all. But his proposition, as Dogberry said about a similar proposition a great many years ago, is "tolerable and not to be endured." No man can even glance over this amendment without seeing that it is sacrificing the whole country to New Jersey.

What will be the effect of the first provision?

That no person or corporation shall have authority to engage in interstate commerce after three months from the passage of this act—

Perhaps I ought to express in passing the extreme gratification I feel that there is a limit of three months' existence without the enforcement of this law—without having procured a license for that purpose from the board of commissioners herein provided.

No man away far up the Tennessee can load his barge and pursue his journey down among the mountains and the valleys and over the Muscle Shoals and past Chattanooga and into the Ohio and down to New Orleans, engaged in interstate commerce as that would be, running through several States, without going first somewhere and getting a license from the commission provided for in the bill which is reported by the Senator from Illinois. No man dare load a boat on any river in the United States with the produce of a State to take into another State, whether it is a canoe or a dugout, a batteau, a barge, a steamboat, or a scow—I speak of a scow with great respect, for scows are common on the Western rivers, at any rate—without getting this license. That may or may not be possible to do; it would be unfortunate to these small traders, certainly; and yet they are in the bill. No ship-owner on our great lakes could start from Duluth, or Ontonagon, or Marquette, or Green Bay, or Milwaukee, or Racine, or Chicago even, with his little hooker loaded with produce there, and go down to Toledo, or Cleveland, or Buffalo, or Detroit, or Oswego with the freight which he had on board his vessel without first getting a license to go.

Mr. PLATT. One could not drive a stage from Wheeling to Bellaire without a license.

Mr. CONGER. No; one could not drive a stage across the Ohio there; but I am not talking now about land companies. I made some remarks about passengers getting through New Jersey. I tried to avoid the culminating point of that argument by saying that there were other ways to go around New Jersey of which the good people of the United States have availed themselves and are availing themselves year by year. They did so at least until some of the old restrictions imposed upon freights and passengers were removed, perhaps by the advice of my friend the Senator from New Jersey. Controlling as he does the railroads of that State with his influence over them in the councils of the administration of railroad men in that State, perhaps by his advice he so made the laws of New Jersey, modified, civilized, regenerated, almost Christianized, as to enable New Jersey to come back into the family of States again with some decent laws in regard to the rest of the citizens of the United States.

But I am now on the subject of water transportation and I leave the subject of land transportation to the Senator from Connecticut who made the happy suggestion to me just now. I was saying that no man could, without a license from these commissioners, take his vessel, or barge, or bateau, or steamboat on any of the navigable waters of the United States. By a law of the United States those are navigable waters which have navigable water communication with other parts of the country and other States; that is under our law for the security of life on steamboats. No man can use the property he has in boats to transport freight from one State to another on any navigable river, or any river not navigable, in the interstate and common-law sense, a highway under the laws of the United States and of the States, on any of our great lakes, on the Mississippi, on the Missouri, on the Columbia, on the Blackwater, on any river anywhere, without first going to these commissioners and, on some terms, I do not know what or how or at what expense, getting a license from them to trade.

Sir, has it come to this, that the narrow, restricted views of New Jersey in regard to passengers and freight are to be extended over the broad domain? Is that the evolution theory by which hinderances and obstructions and impositions are to be placed upon the growing and increasing commerce and intercommunication between the States of this Union? Is that the evolution theory by which New Jersey shall evolve this idea, dear to itself at one time, dear to itself now I should suppose from the manner in which this amendment is presented here, and shall extend it over the great mass of the domain of the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and become the law of the land, and put under subjection every vessel-owner, yes, every cartman who goes over the boundary of a State, every common carrier; for the amendment is comprehensive in its language.

I will say for the Senator from New Jersey that without going into any details whatever he has the gift with one sweeping clause of overturning all the statute laws and reaching out to control all manner of subjects with the smallest number of words and in the most hidden and occult manner of any Senator on this floor. It is a common remark among my brother Senators that in the little nutshell of a paragraph the Senator from New Jersey introduces, in connection with railroads and with transportation, comparatively innocent little remarks or propositions that no one can understand, which make sweeping changes in the whole commercial interests of the country. He has done it before and tries to do it again. If I had that adroitness and that skill in the construction of sentences which the Senator from New Jersey has evinced in the preparation of this amendment, I could rival Talleyrand any day, who said that the object of language was to conceal thought, to conceal the truth. The object of this amendment is to revolutionize and put under control and compel the procuring of licenses by every ship and every vessel-owner on all the waters, rivers, lakes, and the ocean itself, because we have to go out 3 miles by the common law on water to get out into the ocean.

I do not think the Senator from New Jersey can satisfy the Senate the amendment applying to all common carriers, carriers of freight, transporters of produce—that it is for the interest of the people of our States, of those who navigate our lakes and our rivers, of those who carry as cheaply as can be carried the vast produce of the West and of the South to market—that it is for the interest of our constituents that they be subjected to any such restriction, to any such requirement as that. Under the common laws and obligations of commerce and transportation in the United States, well known and well defined, men carry on their business and carry the productions of the vast West to the East and return the productions of the East to the West with a constantly diminishing expense, cheaper and cheaper, so that the producer may receive profits which would otherwise go to the transporter, and that the consumer may receive from the vast granaries of the West the overflowing provisions of that region for the support of himself and his family at a cheaper rate in the East.

I do not know that I understand the proposition. Hidden beneath the soft, flowing language which scarcely casts a ripple upon the shore of this amendment, there seems to me to be an absolute revolution of all our old, accustomed laws, and modes, and measures of transportation. Except that it is printed, except that it seems to have been printed under the authority of Congress, except that it has been introduced with a name attached to it of an honorable Senator, I could scarcely believe that any man would have the temerity, unless by way of a joke, to present such a proposition to the Senate, to say nothing of fastening on the vast body of the American people such a proposition. I take it that it is a joke. I take it that it is a quiet, pleasant, gentlemanly way of throwing ridicule upon the bill itself perhaps, or upon the subject-matter. I take it that not seeing any other way to prevent some little provision being made by which the transportation of commerce by great railroad corporations may be to a small extent modified and controlled by the National Government, as it has been modified and controlled to some extent by the States, the railroad magnates have taken this way and induced my friend here to present a proposition so ridiculous in itself, so overflowing with ridicule, so swelling and enlarging and bursting its bounds by the inherent ridiculousness of the proposition, that it shall in some manner float over and fasten itself upon the bill, which is supposed to be a serious one, now in the hands of the Senator from Illinois.

If that be its object it is an inopportune time for the great evolution theory. It is not a matter of unconcern to my constituents; it is not a matter of little concern to the States of the great Northwest, teeming with produce, whose fields furnish the millions of bushels of wheat and corn and oats and grain of other kinds for the markets of the world and for the consumption of our Eastern brethren; it is not a matter of unconcern to the miners who delve beneath the ground in the dark caves of the earth and procure the copper and the iron which they ship to the markets of the world; it is not a matter of unconcern to the fishermen on the borders of our lakes; it is not a matter of unconcern to the hardy men who spend the winter in bringing down from its lofty heights the towering pine, and cutting it into logs and driving it down the rivers, and manufacturing it in the mills, and preparing it for market and for use for all the various purposes of the community, for homes, for barns, for store-houses, for all those things for which the lumber of the Northwest is used; it is no matter of unconcern to them that their industry and their products, that all these men and hundreds of others that I could name, shall be subject to the little paltry restriction in the amendment, that whoever takes from the place where they have labored to produce these products and carries them to the market where they can sell them and realize the price of their labor must hunt up somewhere a commission and humbly beg of them a license to travel on the great highways which God meant for man to go upon without let and without hinderance, ay, and without license too, from anybody on earth. That is what this amendment says—they shall have a license, a license to go on God's highway, a license to float down the rivers which have been forming through the past ages for the use of man, a license to move their vessels and their steamboats and carry the produce of themselves or their neighbors to market.

I have heard of many kinds of restrictions upon the freedom and ability of men to follow their ordinary pursuits. I do not speak of star chambers, I do not speak of bulldozing, I do not speak of kukluxism, I do not speak of mobs, I do not speak of strikes, and I do not speak of the suppression of laboring men here and of laboring men there; those things are local; they may be, thank God, temporary, and we hope they will; they may be avoided; they may be controlled; they affect but a part of our citizens at a time; but I never yet have known of any legal clause which compelled a vast body of the American people, the whole of them interested either in production and cheap transportation or in consumption and the cheap acquirement of property, to be subjected to the license system of three commissioners appointed by the President, I think, in this bill and confirmed by the Senate—three commissioners. "Five commissioners," I am told.

So much the worse. I never heard of all the vast industries of the nation being submitted for control to a license to trade or not trade, to go or not go, to point the prow onward or inward, to turn the helm this way or that, to go in on the great waters of the land where the winds or the powers of steam or the more humble man who propels his boat laden with freight by a pole as he gets it down the rivers—I never before heard that all that great vast system of industry and all the productions of this vast land should be made subject to the caprice or to the will or even to the sober judgment of any five men that the President might select or any five men that this Senate might confirm, composed of the great men of the land it is true, composed of men who, when they die, our country will find that wisdom has died with them undoubtedly—but sometimes men make mistakes, not intentionally of course, but from lack of information and knowledge. So the Senate may confirm men from New Jersey—think of it!—with such views as are embodied in this amendment, thinking it their duty to stick this man on this lake and that man on that river, interfering with the flatboat and even with the Senator from North Carolina as he is taking the phosphates down the Cape Fear River and the French Broad and all those rivers that he has urged Congress to make appropriations to improve so that the overflowing productions of that land may not lie idle in the glorious State of North Carolina, but may get by these water communications to the market. With the trouble already on the poor boatman there, he is asked to vote to compel his constituent before he starts from away up the waters at the uttermost navigable portions of those rivers, as far up as the rivers themselves have capacity for valuable floatage on barges, to get a license! The Senator has persuaded Congress to make appropriations to make available those streams up among the mountains of his State, and now a man must send out from Carolina to his Senator, humbly beseeching him to procure from this commission a permit to go down the French Broad! Or perhaps the Senator from Georgia will get that permission for one of his constituents to go down the Cape Fear River.

I know the people of that country are intelligent, as they are all over the nation, but it would take more than three months for the laboring men on those rivers, with their boats of whatever dimensions, to find out that there was such an irreconcilable folly perpetrated by the Congress of the United States as should compel them to go away off and use all the diplomatic arts and powers and influence of their Senators and Representatives to find out first where these five men were and then to bring influence to show that they were not offensive partisans and were worthy of a license.

I am drawing a picture I know that horrifies the Senator from North Carolina. I see by his countenance already that no such proposition as that will be allowed to affect the navigation of the Cape Fear or the French Broad, because I have been upon the Committee on Commerce with the Senator from North Carolina long enough to know that if he has any one thing dear to his heart it is the improvement of the navigation of the rivers of his own State, so that men may carry their produce cheaply and without license from anybody. Contrary to his old convictions, the Senator from North Carolina has of late years seen the importance of cheap transportation and cheap navigation, so that it has overcome his old life-long constitutional scruples about internal improvements in his State. The time was when Carolina would not receive money from the General Government. But my friend from Carolina has overcome that scruple. He does not ask it himself, because he is too modest to do that, but if the Committee on Commerce force appropriations to improve these rivers so that his people can bring down their boats, he is willing quietly to let them pass and let them go into the bill. But neither he nor any other man through whose State runs a river, or on whose borders is a lake, or whose shores are laved and washed by the ocean itself—none of those people can vote for such a proposition as this.

If the appeal were to the Senator from Nevada, away up in the mountains above the storm-clouds, in a region where there is neither river, nor lake, nor rain, nor dew, nor transportation—plenty of hollows in which there might be lakes and might be rivers, but no water—it would not be unreasonable to ask him to vote for such a proposition as this. Some of my friends from the prairies, if there be any such, through which no river runs, might be willing to forego the old transportation of boats through the dew and let this provision pass, but they would have to get a license.

But, sir, I rose without fear of the result and I feel that there is no necessity for further remark upon the knowledge which every Senator on this floor has. Nevada is a State which is perched up too near heaven and has too much gold and silver to need anything else; and there they have no rivers, and no water, and no rain, and no dew, but clear, naked, glittering gold and silver. No other State has a Senator here that would vote for this thing except the Senator from New Jersey, who is in a State where rivers run and where the ocean laves the shore and where it has all the privileges and blessings of water communication that any State can have in this Union, but which has not its representative here of rivers, which has no representative here of its steamboats, which has no one here to call the long roll of the classical names of its canal-boats, but has here the spirit which would prompt an amendment like that now offered. Nevada and New Jersey may possibly vote for such a proposition. If there is any other Senator whose State has no rivers, and no lakes, and no seashore, and no water communication, we may lose a vote or two for this amendment; otherwise this amendment is doomed to the sleep that knows no waking, not even to be honored by funeral obsequies; and so I leave it.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan covered a wide field in his remarks on this subject, in which I will not attempt to follow him. The bent of my mind runs in a business line and right to the point to which I wish to arrive.

The only object of this amendment was to bring the competing lines in Canada, so far as their termini within our States are concerned—was in order to have their business which originates within our States under the same control that the bill places upon the American roads.

I had no idea of touching water communication, not a particle of it. I represent a State that, next to the State of Maine, builds more vessels than any other State in the country and that has the largest water transportation running through it of any State in the Union at the present day, not excepting the Mississippi River, and certainly I should not do anything to interfere with my constituents in that way. We build more vessels and carry more freight on our vessels than any State in this Union to-day through our own waters.

As I said before, if you take the four great trunk lines which terminate in New Jersey, constituting say 40,000 miles of railroad, one-third of all your mileage; taking these lines and their connections, they represent a capital, in the proportion that the number of miles bears to the whole, of probably $2,500,000,000. Those great corporations have their termini in my State. Their employés alone amount to not less than twenty-five thousand people; and the families that they support are not much less than 10 per cent. of our population. So we get a living for 10 per cent. of the population in New Jersey indirectly through the great corporations that traverse our State and that spread out all the way from New Jersey to Cincinnati, Saint Louis, Chicago, and so on farther west.

This bill, if it becomes a law without some control of the competing lines in Canada which I suggest and which is the only thing I desire to attain by this amendment, would depreciate that property to such an extent that it would be a public calamity.

A large portion of the population of this country to-day exists on the securities issued by railroad corporations, which I suppose amount to seven or eight billion dollars; and every man who has anything for himself or for his family must necessarily have a small amount of investments of that kind.

Now, is it reasonable to suppose that the American Congress will deliberately sacrifice the rights and the investments of those citizens when it has the power to place the same restrictions on connecting lines through Canada under this amendment that it has on the roads chartered by its own States? I did not suppose there would be any objection to this part of the amendment. I think one part that I referred to in relation to the lines in New York running through one State is a fair subject for a difference of opinion, and I expected to have that attacked by some of the Senators who think differently from myself as far as that part of the amendment is concerned; but the main proposition, to control the competing lines in Canada, I did not suppose would meet with any opposition.

The Senator from Michigan has alluded to the State of New Jersey, as he has been in the habit of doing on former occasions, and her system of taxation. I beg to say that what he has said would leave a false impression. The State of New Jersey never taxes anybody unequally. The State of New Jersey to-day is as free as any State in the Union for any set of men to build railroads, and her taxation is just as light as that of any other State. In the early days of railroads, when the first charters were issued, it was considered a fair mode of taxation that a railroad corporation should pay taxes in proportion to the business it did, and I consider it so to-day. It is only a means of arriving at the basis of taxation. New Jersey once taxed her own passengers and the passengers who passed through the State 10 cents each, and 10 cents a ton on freight going through the State. She did not tax outsiders as much as her own people, because if a citizen went 30 miles in the State he paid just as much as the man who went from Philadelphia to New York, 90 miles. That is true of all other taxes. But the matter was agitated all over the country, and the State changed her mode of taxation, and is getting just as much tax now as she did then, although some other States, I understand, still retain this mode of computing railroad taxation. New Jersey never charged, as stated by the Senator from Michigan, a dollar a head on passengers.

As I said, Mr. President, I had no idea of interfering in any way with the class of traffic mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, and I shall be glad, so far as this amendment is concerned, if the main features of it that I refer to may be adopted, and eliminate from it anything that would interfere with what he desires to protect, and which I have fully as much interest in protecting as he possibly has.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] undoubtedly demolished the proposition which he spoke against, and I do not think that any further argument upon that line would be needed if any such proposition was now before the Senate; but the proposition of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] was not the one which the Senator from Michigan discussed. We are all delighted with his eloquence and his argument in destroying the man of straw which he had set up. I think he was entirely successful in so doing. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, however, does not meet with my approval, even in the modified shape in which it is now before the Senate. Undoubtedly his chief object in offering it was to secure control over the trunk lines of railroads which enter the territory of the United States and then pass through the Dominion of Canada. But it was believed by the committee that we had secured that object substantially by the bill as it now stands, and I think it is quite as well secured in the bill as it now stands as it would be if the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey should be adopted.

The objections to and the difficulties in the way of issuing a license to every common carrier under this bill it seems to me would be so great as to prevent the commission ever successfully carrying out the provisions of the bill if the amendment should be adopted. It will be seen that the first section of this bill provides that all railroad companies doing an interstate-commerce business or doing a business which extends from the United States into any of the adjacent foreign countries is brought under its control. The language is:

> That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States to any other State or Territory of the United States, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, and also to the transportation in like manner of property shipped from any place in the United States to a foreign country and carried from such place to a port of transshipment, or shipped from a foreign country to any place in the United States and carried to such place from a port of entry either in the United States or an adjacent foreign country.

It was believed by the committee that that would control all through shipments passing over the trunk-lines of Canada. For instance, what is known as the Grand Trunk Railroad, receiving its freight in the United States at Chicago and carrying it through Canada to Portland, Me., or to Boston, on to New York over connecting railroads in the United States, would be as thoroughly controlled by all the provisions of this bill as any of the great through trunk-lines which are entirely located within the bounds of the United States. Quite likely it would not be able to reach freights which starting from Chicago should stop at some point in Canada, and I do not know that we are at all concerned in attempting to reach or control such transportation as that. But I have no doubt that all the other provisions of this bill can be enforced against those companies or their agents and their connecting lines in the United States, for certainly the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada can do nothing in transporting grain from Chicago to Portland, Me., save as it operates through connecting lines running from Chicago to the Canadian frontier and again from Canada to Portland, Me. After a shipment leaves the Dominion of Canada our control over it, it seems to me, is absolute and perfect.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. How can you control the Grand Trunk Railroad outside of the United States, unless you have a provision of this kind in the bill?

Mr. MILLER. This bill, of course, would cover the shipments of freight through Canada starting in the United States, passing through Canada, and coming again into the United States. As I have said before, it probably can not be made to apply to the transportation of freight from Chicago, for instance, to some point in Canada and there stopping. If the Grand Trunk Railroad saw fit to give a drawback or a rebate to freight thus disposed of, stopping within its own territory, I doubt very much if we could reach it; but if freight should be transported through Canada into the United States, coming into any of our States, I have not any doubt at all that the provisions of this bill can be enforced against the connecting line in the United States and that they would be held under this bill, and if they were punished under it they would see to it that the connecting line in Canada carried out rigorously the provisions of this act. I do not see how the Grand Trunk Railroad is to allow any rebate to a shipper in the United States when the grain starts from some point in the United States and is landed at another point in the United States; its transactions are entirely with the connecting roads; they are not with the individual shipper at all. The agents of the American line make the rate in Chicago, and the produce is delivered to the agent of a United States road at Portland or at Boston or at New York, and I think there can be no difficulty about reaching such shipments.

Mr. SEWELL. But that does not cover the point. The Grand Trunk road could give a drawback, while the terminal lines in the United States would say they had nothing at all to do with it.

I will state as a matter of information to-day that this line is picking up at Chicago all the dressed-meat business of the West and is doing it through two individuals, making the greatest monopoly in this country to-day by the very system of drawbacks which this bill is designed to reach. It is throwing all that business in the West to-day into the hands of two men, and the sellers of beef have to go and pay their price for it simply because they can transport it on better terms than others.

Mr. MILLER. Of course the Senator from New Jersey is speaking of a condition of affairs which exists now when this bill is not in force, as it has not been passed and is not the law of the land. I am speaking of what I believe will be the condition of affairs if this bill should become a law. Under section 5 of this bill—

Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, within sixty days after this act shall take effect, file with the commission appointed under the provisions of this act copies of its tariffs of rates and fares.

They are otherwise compelled by the commission to publish their rates so that they may be known to all our people. In that section it will be seen how the common carriers or railroads are to be punished for refusing or failing to publish their tariff rates. Let me read, commencing at line 46:

If any common carrier shall neglect or refuse to file or publish its tariffs of rates, fares, and charges, as provided in this section, or any part of the same, such common carrier shall be subject to a writ of mandamus, to be issued by any circuit court of the United States within the jurisdiction where the principal office of said common carrier is situated, and if such common carrier be a foreign corporation, in the judicial circuit wherein such common carrier accepts traffic and has an agent to perform such service, to compel compliance with the aforesaid provisions of this section; and such writ shall issue in the name of the people of the United States, at the relation of the commissioners appointed under the provisions of this act; and failure to comply with its requirements shall be punishable as and for a contempt; and the said commissioners, as complainants, may also apply, in any such circuit court of the United States, for a writ of injunction against such common carrier—to restrain such common carrier from receiving or transporting property among the several States and Territories of the United States, or between the United States and adjacent foreign countries, or between ports of transshipment and of entry and the several States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned in the first section of this act, until such common carrier shall have complied with the aforesaid provisions of this section of this act, &c.

Then let me say further in this connection that it is forbidden under severe penalties that any greater rate shall be charged for the transportation of freight to any person or corporation than is provided for in these published rates. Thus in this one particular at all events this bill gives complete control in the matter, and in section 2 all common carriers, including the agents of foreign corporations and foreign corporations themselves, are forbidden to give "any special rate, rebate, drawback, or by any other device to charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation of a like kind of traffic under substantially similar circumstances and conditions."

But, Mr. President, the committee desired most effectually to guard this point, and if it can be shown that it can be more thoroughly and carefully guarded than we have done it I have no doubt the entire committee will welcome any such amendment, but the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey proposes to require of all common carriers as described under this bill that they shall procure a license before they can engage in the business of interstate commerce. It seems to me that that is an unnecessary and a burdensome charge upon commerce and upon the lines. This subject was fully considered by the committee, and after full consideration it was decided that the license provision should be entirely left out. It might of course be provided that corporations doing business between the United States and adjacent foreign countries should receive a license before engaging in that business, and should thereby bind themselves to carry out all the provisions of this act. I doubt, however, if it would be found of any avail if such a provision as that should be put into the bill. In my judgment the bill contains in its present condition regulations which are sufficient for the protection of the interests of our own lines; certainly it was the desire of all the members of the committee to thus carefully guard it, and I would suggest to the Senator from New Jersey that the provisions of his amendment as he has now altered them would be of little avail in this matter. I believe that they are unnecessary and therefore unwise.

Mr. President, I may say at this time of this bill that the committee which was appointed by the Senate a little more than a year ago upon this particular subject and was given full power to investigate the question in all its bearings, to call before it whomsoever it saw fit and to travel wherever it saw fit for the collection of information, did, after a long time spent in the collection of testimony, come almost unanimously to the conclusion that this bill and its provisions were the wisest that could be suggested at the present time. In that investigation the committee had before it not only many of the leading railroad men of the country, but in nearly every one of the principal cities of the Union it called and did hear the leading merchants and transporters of the country. It called also a large number of manufacturers and farmers, who are directly interested, of course, in the question of transportation. In addition it called to its aid the best legal talent, or I may say the best legal theoretical talent, on the question of railroad transportation to be found in this country, and it advised with them all, and its reports show, if they are carefully read by the Senate, that a vast majority of all those who were called before the committee did, in one way or another, substantially approve of nearly all the provisions of this bill. Not only the railroad men, but the shippers and the producers and the theorists almost unanimously came to the conclusion that this bill, as it is now before the Senate, was probably the best legislation which could be had upon the subject at the present time.

I need not here speak of the difficulties of legislation of this kind; they are well known to us all. The problem of the control of the railroad and transportation interests of this country is to my mind one of the most difficult questions which ever have been presented to a legislative body. Within the life of the majority of the members of this body the entire railroad system of this country has been created. In less than fifty years it has grown from nothing to its present magnitude, when we have nearly 130,000 miles of railroad. It has completely changed the methods of business and of commerce and of manufacture. It has also changed the value of our farm lands. It has made the West possible; it has substantially obliterated distance; and it has made us one people. This great interest has grown thus rapidly until to-day it is estimated by statisticians that the value of our railroads is nearly, if not quite, one quarter of the value of the entire material wealth of all our people. Certain it is that the railroad securities to-day of all kinds, including stocks, bonds, and other evidences of debt, equal in round numbers, $8,000,000,000. It is believed, however, that this is fully double the actual cost of the lines, and thus that commerce is burdened to-day by an attempt at least to pay a fair rate of interest upon a capital twice that actually invested in the business. But this great injury has been done, and it may be true that the railroad companies and those who have organized them are not entirely to blame in the matter, for this could never have been if there had been wise legislation at the beginning, but neither Congress nor any of our State Legislatures had any fair or proper conception of what the railroad system of this country was to be when railroads were in their infancy, and as a result charters were given without limitations, and in nearly all of the States general railroad laws were passed which permitted any five individuals to organize, file a map, and proceed to build a railroad wherever they saw fit.

This system has gone on, and the injustice which has grown up under it by favoritism to persons, by favoritism to particular towns, by a thousand and one forms of unjust discrimination against individuals and places, has been such that at the present time the principal question before the people is how this vast power shall be properly controlled, shall be so controlled as to bring the greatest benefit to all our people, and at the same time to neither destroy nor unjustly injure railroad property itself. Many efforts have been made. We know of the efforts that were made in the West and of the result under what was called the granger laws, that by applying exact and iron-bound rules and regulations as to their tariffs and by the passage of pro rata freight laws not only the railroads themselves were greatly injured, but all the people of the States who expected to be benefited by them were equally injured, and in most cases those rigorous laws were abandoned.

In the East in the study of this question the State of Massachusetts first led off with a railroad-commission law, which has been in operation now for many years, and which is admitted on all hands, by the railroads and by the people of Massachusetts, to have been of great benefit to them. The railroad-commission law of Massachusetts, as is well known, is a law which gives to a commission the power to investigate all complaints made against the railroads for any or all causes and report thereon. It has no power of enforcing its decisions. The decisions are enforced only by the power of public opinion, which is called into force by the recommendations which are made by the commission. The investigation in Boston when the commission was called before our committee and when the principal shippers of Boston were called before it brought out the fact that this commission had succeeded in settling nearly all the difficulties arising between the shippers and the railroad companies in Massachusetts, and that it had brought about a settlement of many questions which had before caused great trouble and which had brought about great hardship to the shipping interests of Massachusetts. I believe that the whole people of Massachusetts are to-day substantially satisfied with their railroad commission.

Some other States have followed in the same line, notably the State of New York, which within the last few years has adopted substantially the Massachusetts law with equally good results. For many years the railroads of New York fought against any commission bill. They claimed and demanded the right to manage their own affairs as they saw fit. Claiming for themselves the same privileges in the control of their own affairs as comes to the ordinary private citizen in the management of his private business, for many years they prevented the Legislature of the State of New York from legislating upon this question at all. But finally all parties were satisfied that some tribunal was necessary, that there must be some common ground found where the complaints of the shippers, the manufacturers, and the farmers could be heard, and where the railroads could be heard, and where there could be given some judgment upon the question. Finally New York passed her railroad-commission law, which, as I have stated, is substantially the law of Massachusetts. It has been accepted by every railroad corporation within its borders; and I do not believe that there is to-day a railroad corporation in the State of New York or any of the officers of any of the railroads who would consent to the repeal of that law. The commission has heard the complaints, it has adjusted them by making public its decisions, and in nearly all cases the railroad companies have carried into effect the recommendations of the railroad commission.

Many of the States are adopting substantially this system; and reasoning from the beneficial effects which have come from the adoption of these laws in many of the States of the Union, it has seemed to the committee and to all who have considered the subject that perhaps a similar law, which should take into consideration all interstate commerce, which certainly is of greater importance than the commerce of any particular State or any number of our States, would be equally beneficial; for to-day the principal complaints which are made against the railroad companies of the country are made in regard to interstate commerce. The complaints are that particular great shippers of grain and produce are favored by the great transportation companies, that they are given lower rates than the ordinary shipper, and that therefore the men who have grown rich by these discriminations can and do crush out all single individuals of moderate capital who attempt to engage in the transportation of the great produce of our country.

The investigation before the committee showed conclusively that complaints of this kind were being constantly made, and they were of great force and weight with the committee. It was for that reason that the committee in preparing this bill went further than any of the State laws have gone. This bill undertakes to enact as a statute and to provide that there shall be no unjust discriminations between shippers, great or small, that there shall be no such thing as drawbacks or rebates, and that the great injustice which has been done to many of our people by a railroad company undertaking to give to one firm or to one individual a drawback or rebate upon the amount of freight shipped over its road, which was so great as to prevent all other shippers from engaging in the business, will be entirely removed if this bill shall become a law.

The committee has undertaken also to provide that there shall be no unjust discriminations as between different portions of our country. Many complaints have been made, and great have been the complaints, that railroad companies have given rates to the shippers of a particular town which were so much more favorable than the rates given to the shippers of another or adjacent town, that one town was ruined entirely for the advantage of another town. You may to-day travel over our land and you will find that where twenty-five or thirty years ago there were young cities starting up with great promise of growth, by the unjust system of discrimination which has been pursued by railroads they have either been destroyed or prevented from further growing, and in their place at competing points have grown up great cities, absolutely created by the unjust discrimination of railroad companies. The committee believed that this was all wrong, and it has undertaken to provide by a positive enactment that it shall not be done.

In my judgment, notwithstanding all the benefits which railroads have conferred on our people by almost destroying distance and time in the transportation of passengers and freight, still they have done our country a great wrong in destroying the value of large portions of it and increasing the value of other portions of it by unjust discriminations given to particular towns. The abnormal growth of our great cities, our manufacturing centers, during the past thirty years can be attributed almost entirely to the discriminations of railroad companies. If it had not been for this, instead of a few great and overgrown centers where wealth is accumulated enormously and where crime and misery have accumulated in a like proportion, there would now be scattered all over this broad country in every little village and hamlet the great industries which collect around a few great competing points.

If we believe that the chief benefit which comes to our country from a protective tariff is to be found in the fact that it brings diversified industries to our people, is it not equally true that these diversified industries should be spread all over the country and not brought together in a few great centers? I can show you, if you will travel with me in New England, in New York, and in Pennsylvania, the ruins of many heretofore successful establishments which have been abandoned and given up, the proprietors finding it necessary to transfer their plant to some great railroad center in order that they might there have the benefits of railroad competition. Has this been any benefit to our people at large? Not at all. Wherever you seize upon the powers of nature, wherever you occupy a water-power and establish a manufactory, you there increase the value of the surrounding farm lands; but when you make it impossible for our people to use these forces of nature, when you compel them by your railroad rates to give up water power and move to great cities and there use steam power only in order that they may have the benefit of a cheap transportation, you are making a few great centers rich—rich not out of newly created wealth, but rich simply because you transfer wealth from other portions of our country to those great centers. Thus great injury has been done to our country, not intentionally, by the railroads, but because heretofore being left to compete among themselves they have found it necessary to make discriminating rates at competing points.

Our investigation shows that the great bulk of the transporters of this country, the bulk of the railroad men of this country, are to-day being aroused to the injustice of this operation. The railroads are finding that it is for their advantage to cultivate and foster local traffic, and therefore it is that they are willing to give up the great power of thus discriminating against persons and places. But one railroad line says that it can not abandon this power which it has used heretofore unless all the other railroad lines are compelled to abandon it at the same time. We must acknowledge the force of that argument. It can not be carried out except it be carried out as a whole, and it is for this reason that it has been thought wise that we should attempt to bring over the great interstate commerce of this country a control similar to that which has been brought over the transportation of many of the individual States.

I said that this bill goes further than many of our State laws. Let me read the provision of section 4:

> That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property subject to the provisions of this act for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, and from the same original point of departure: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time make general rules covering exceptions to any such common carrier, in cases where there is competition by river, sea, canal, or lake, exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act.

The committee believed that that section was absolutely necessary if we were to prevent unjust discrimination between different persons or between different towns. It is undoubtedly a question of the very first importance not only to the railroad companies but to the producers and the shippers.

While some of our States have gone so far as to provide that under no circumstance shall any railroad charge more for a short than a long haul, the committee did not believe it wise in this early stage of its legislation to make so rigid a provision as that. Therefore it is provided that upon an application to the commission an exception may be made if there shall be found good reason for it. Provision is also made that this shall apply to all freights starting from the same point and going in the same direction. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] has made a very able argument against the provision as to starting from the same initial point. I must confess that I was greatly inclined to that opinion when the matter was being considered in the committee, but after full consideration and investigation the committee adopted the language which we find in the fourth section, and it is substantially the Massachusetts law.

I have no doubt that that fact was to a large extent controlling with the committee in presenting the language as we find it here. I can see, however, very little danger if the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should prevail so long as the proviso is maintained in the bill. I do not believe it would be safe to enact in the bill an absolute provision that there should under no circumstances be a greater charge for a short than for a long haul, because, as we all know, during a large portion of the year when the great lakes and the canals and the rivers are open, it is quite probable that such a provision might work at times severe hardship to some particular railroad company, or to some particular community; but so long as the provision shall be permitted to remain in the bill allowing the commission upon application by any of the railroad companies to make an exception in a particular case, I believe that no great harm can come to the railroad companies, even if the amendment or a portion of the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should be adopted.

The law in Pennsylvania has been equivalent to that for the past twenty-five years, and I believe that the whole railroad business of that great State has adapted itself to the provisions of that law and that none of the railroad officials and none of the shippers of that State would to-day desire to change it. Substantially the same law prevails in Ohio, I think precisely the same law, and in a number of other States of the Union; just how many I am not able to say.

That provision, to my mind, either amended or not amended as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia, is by far the most important provision in the bill. Take that out and the bill is of very little use; the commission would be able to accomplish but very little. True they might investigate and report to Congress, but their powers in preventing unjust discriminations between persons or between different shipping points would be almost nothing. I trust that the Senate will agree with the committee and leave that section substantially as it is.

The bill does not attempt to fix rates. The committee did not believe that it was wise for Congress to undertake to do that with its present imperfect knowledge. It did not believe that it was wise to give that power to any commission which might be organized under the bill. I believe that the history of all railroad legislation, not only of this country but of Europe, will bear the committee out in that judgment. We have not yet so far advanced in the science of transportation and of the management of railroads that we can say by exact statute what shall be the limit of railroad charges; but when we provide that there shall be no unjust discrimination between persons, without regard to whether they are large or small shippers, when we undertake to provide that there shall be no unjust discrimination against particular places, and when we undertake to say that there shall be no greater charge for a short than for a long haul, we shall have gone very far toward remedying and removing all the complaints which are made against the railroad companies at the present day.

There was no doubt in the minds of the committee as to the power of the Federal Government to enact this legislation, and in that respect I may notice that there has been a great change in public opinion and in the laws of our country by the decisions of the courts within the last ten or fifteen years. Ten years ago undoubtedly a majority of the railroad lawyers of the country and the railroad officials of the country held that there was no power whatever in the Federal Government to exercise any control over railroads, and no power to in any way affect their management. Only a few years previous to that there was no admission on the part of any railroads of this country that there was any power in a State government to regulate their charges or in any way control their business. Gradually, as the matter has been brought before the courts of the country, commencing with the lower courts until finally it has reached to our highest courts, it has been shown that the power of State governments over the railroads within their bounds is undoubtedly absolute and complete, and that the various States could, if they saw fit, enact laws fixing absolutely the rate of charges.

Undoubtedly at the present time also it is admitted by nearly all engaged in transportation that the Federal Government through the power given it in the Constitution can use and exercise the powers which are conferred on the commission under the provisions of the bill. I believe that no one will be found to deny it. The question then is simply one of advisability, whether it is wise to pass this legislation, to give our people this measure of relief and to provide a court where all the people may come with their complaints, where they may be heard, where there may be a thorough investigation, where testimony may be taken, and where there shall be a decision by a commission of disinterested men, Government officials; and then if the railroads refuse to carry out the recommendations of the commission the shipper still has his remedy at law; he may still appeal to the common law and to the courts to give him justice.

I have no doubt myself, if this bill shall be enacted into a law and the commissioners shall be appointed under it, the same beneficial results will come from it as have come from the enactment of similar laws in various States. I belive it is as far as we can go at the present time in this matter, and until a commission shall have been established and shall have made its reports to Congress I believe it would be unwise to go further in the direction of making absolute and iron-clad regulations for the transportation of freight.

The bill provides, and one of its chief provisions is, that there shall be publicity of rates. It has been found in various States that publicity was the great corrector of all the evils complained of. If a railroad company were not permitted to make secret rates, if the rates were published to all, then every shipper, no matter what his importance or unimportance might be, would know precisely what the railroad was doing, and he would be able to manage his business accordingly. Thus it is that in this bill we have provided under severe penalties for a publishing of rates, and then we have forbidden that rates shall be raised except upon ten days' notice. Some have believed, and some of the committee believed, that longer notice ought to be given; some thought that it might be done on shorter notice; but finally the committee decided upon ten days as a proper limit of notice. If the Senate shall think that a longer notice would be better it can express that opinion by so voting.

It was not thought wise by the committee that there should be any limit of time as to notice of the reduction of rates. If in the competition of railroad and water routes it should be found necessary that a railroad should reduce its rates, it was believed to be in the interest of the people that the railroad should be left free to reduce its rates, but when it had once reduced its rates that it should not raise them again except upon ten days' notice. These provisions in the judgment of the committee are of very great importance.

I do not know that many amendments are to be suggested to the bill, or that there is any desire to materially change it, and therefore I shall not go into any larger discussion of the measure; but if amendments materially changing the character of the bill shall be proposed, I may then undertake to present my views more fully upon any of the particular points which may be raised.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from New Jersey will yield the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

LABOR ARBITRATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Constitution imposes upon the President the duty of recommending to the consideration of Congress from time to time such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

I am so deeply impressed with the importance of immediately and thoughtfully meeting the problem which recent events and a present condition have thrust upon us, involving the settlement of disputes arising between our laboring men and their employers, that I am constrained to recommend to Congress legislation upon this serious and pressing subject.

Under our form of government the value of labor as an element of national prosperity should be distinctly recognized, and the welfare of the laboring man should be regarded as especially entitled to legislative care. In a country which offers to all its citizens the highest attainment of social and political distinction its workingmen can not justly or safely be considered as irrevocably consigned to the limits of a class and entitled to no attention and allowed no protest against neglect.

The laboring man, bearing in his hand an indispensable contribution to our growth and progress, may well insist, with manly courage and as a right, upon the same recognition from those who make our laws as is accorded to any other citizen having a valuable interest in charge; and his reasonable demands should be met in such a spirit of appreciation and fairness as to induce a contented and patriotic co-operation in the achievement of a grand national destiny.

While the real interests of labor are not promoted by a resort to threats and violent manifestations, and while those who under the pretext of an advocacy of the claims of labor wantonly attack the rights of capital, and for selfish purposes or the love of disorder sow seeds of violence and discontent, should neither be encouraged nor conciliated, all legislation on the subject should be calmly and deliberately undertaken, with no purpose of satisfying unreasonable demands or gaining partisan advantage.

The present condition of the relations between labor and capital are far from satisfactory. The discontent of the employed is due in a large degree to the grasping and heedless exactions of employers and the alleged discrimination in favor of capital as an object of governmental attention. It must also be conceded that the laboring men are not always careful to avoid causeless and unjustifiable disturbance.

Though the importance of a better accord between these interests is apparent, it must be borne in mind that any effort in that direction by the Federal Government must be greatly limited by constitutional restrictions. There are many grievances which legislation by Congress can not redress, and many conditions which can not by such means be reformed.

I am satisfied, however, that something may be done under Federal authority to prevent the disturbances which so often arise from disputes between employers and the employed, and which at times seriously threaten the business interests of the country; and, in my opinion, the proper theory upon which to proceed is that of voluntary arbitration as the means of settling these difficulties.

But I suggest that instead of arbitration chosen in the heat of conflicting claims, and after each dispute shall arise, there be created a commission of labor, consisting of three members, who shall be regular officers of the Government, charged among other duties with the consideration and settlement, when possible, of all controversies between labor and capital.

A commission thus organized would have the advantage of being a stable body, and its members, as they gained experience, would constantly improve in their ability to deal intelligently and usefully with the questions which might be submitted to them. If arbitrators are chosen for temporary service as each case of dispute arises, experience and familiarity with much that is involved in the question will be lacking, extreme partisanship and bias will be the qualifications sought on either side, and frequent complaints of unfairness and partiality will be inevitable. The imposition upon a Federal court of a duty so foreign to the judicial function as the selection of an arbitrator in such cases is at least of doubtful propriety.

The establishment by Federal authority of such a bureau would be a just and sensible recognition of the value of labor, and of its right to be represented in the departments of the Government. So far as its conciliatory offices shall have relation to disturbances which interfere with transit and commerce between the States, its existence would be justified under the provisions of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." And in the frequent disputes between the laboring men and their employers of less extent, and the consequences of which are confined within State limits and threaten domestic violence, the interposition of such a commission might be tendered upon the application of the Legislature or executive of a State under the constitutional provision which requires the General Government to "protect" each of the States "against domestic violence."

If such a commission were fairly organized the risk of a loss of popular support and sympathy resulting from a refusal to submit to so peaceful an instrumentality would constrain both parties to such disputes to invoke its interference and abide by its decisions. There would also be good reason to hope that the very existence of such an agency would invite application to it for advice and counsel, frequently resulting in the avoidance of contention and misunderstanding.

If the usefulness of such a commission is doubted because it might lack power to enforce its decisions, much encouragement is derived from the conceded good that has been accomplished by the railroad commissions which have been organized in many of the States, which, having little more than advisory power, have exerted a most salutary influence in the settlement of disputes between conflicting interests.

In July, 1884, by a law of Congress, a Bureau of Labor was established and placed in charge of a Commissioner of Labor, who is required to "collect information upon the subject of labor, its relations to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity."

The commission which I suggest could easily be ingrafted upon the bureau thus already organized by the addition of two more commissioners and by supplementing the duties now imposed upon it by such other powers and functions as would permit the commissioners to act as arbitrators when necessary between labor and capital, under such limitations and upon such occasions as should be deemed proper and useful.

Power should also be distinctly conferred upon this bureau to investigate the causes of all disputes as they occur, whether submitted for arbitration or not, so that information may always be at hand to aid legislation on the subject when necessary and desirable.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 22, 1886.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the message be printed, and I suppose it should be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I presume that would be the proper committee.

Mr. GRAY and others. It should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will first state the question. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the message be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HOAR. I did not rise to address the Chair upon that question, but to move an executive session.

Mr. HARRIS. It is suggested, and it is quite in accordance with my view, if the Senator from Massachusetts thinks it is proper, that the message had better go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. I did not rise to speak upon that subject. I rose to move an executive session. I supposed the question of reference had been disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the message be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER. I move as an amendment that it go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. I was rising to ask that the message be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. GEORGE. It ought to go to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from Tennessee is that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEORGE. I move as a substitute that the message be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is not amendable. The Senator can ask for a division on the question of printing.

Mr. HOAR. As there seems likely to be some difference of opinion in the Senate upon the reference of the message, I will make my motion now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the message be printed. I am sure there will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the message will be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion to refer will remain pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the question of reference, the Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 16, 1886.

[The following four confirmations appear in the RECORD of April 21, 1886, page 3779, but the reports of the Finance Committee accompanying them were inadvertently omitted, and are now inserted:]

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Freeman Barnum, of Missouri, to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Missouri.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 858) of Freeman Barnum, of Missouri, to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of Missouri, in place of Isaac H. Sturgeon, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Barnum is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Isaac H. Sturgeon, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of Isaac H. Sturgeon, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of Missouri, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Barnum.

John T. Hillsman, of Tennessee, to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Tennessee.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 872) of John T. Hillsman, of Tennessee, to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Tennessee, in place of Archelaus M. Hughes, suspended, and so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Hillsman is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Archelaus M. Hughes suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Hillsman.

Charles E. Hasbrook, of Missouri, to be collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Missouri.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Hasbrook.

James Shields, of Montana, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 1487) of James Shields, of Montana, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana, in place of Thomas P. Fuller, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Shields is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Thomas P. Fuller, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of Thomas P. Fuller, late collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

POSTMASTER AT HAMBURG, IOWA.

The Senate, on the 22d of April, 1886—

Ordered, That the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on the nomination of George Wise, to be postmaster at Hamburg, Iowa, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of George Wise to be postmaster at Hamburg, Iowa, vice H. C. Coolbaugh, suspended, submit the following report:

The suspended officer had been postmaster at Hamburg for several years, and was reappointed January 22, 1885, for the term of four years. During the recess of the Senate he was suspended by the President, who designated George Wise to discharge the duties of the office.

The suspension of Mr. Coolbaugh was induced by Mr. Wise, who applied to the President for the appointment, and filed charges and specifications against the incumbent. The letter of application for appointment of Mr. Wise, and the charges and specifications presented by him, are here given as follows, namely:

HAMBURG, FREMONT COUNTY, IOWA, May 6, 1885.

SIR: I respectfully solicit appointment as postmaster at this place. Am fifty-two years old, and believe myself competent in all respects to fill the position. Education not classic, but fair. As to general character, habits, &c., I refer to letters from our best business men, herewith transmitted.

GEO. WISE,
Editor Democratic News.

Hon. W. F. VILAS,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

I submit the following argument:

(1) I desire the postmastership as a means to an honorable end.

(2) The present incumbent, H. C. Coolbaugh, is part owner of the Hamburg Times, an uncompromising Republican newspaper, and the emoluments of the post-office go in a measure to its support, the income of the Times and the post-office being pooled in common.

(3) H. C. Coolbaugh was reappointed by President Arthur from February 18, 1885—at the close of his administration—for four years.

(4) I have a consciousness that the Democracy will be pleased with a change of postmasters, and that Republicans generally expect it, and will neither be surprised nor disappointed.

(5) For reasons herein given, on the following page, I believe the postal service here demands a change of postmasters.

(6) I have in view a very suitable building, with regular bank vault for the safety of all Government property and money, at a very reasonable rental.

(7) I submit a series of charges herewith, which have developed casually, and which are susceptible of proof on investigation. I simply ask that an inspector be sent here to fathom the facts.

CAUSE FOR REMOVAL.

In 1881 (or possibly 1882) Samuel Holmes, lawyer, and H. C. Coolbaugh, music dealer, bought of Peter St. Clair, then postmaster, the Times newspaper office. It was of no value beyond its material worth. A condition of that bargain and sale was that the postmastership should go with the newspaper office; and in consummation thereof Peter St. Clair resigned, having first secured a pledge from W. P. Hepburn, then, as now, a member of Congress (at that time representing a district in which this county was included), that H. C. Coolbaugh would be appointed postmaster at Hamburg. The compact was kept in good faith, as Mr. Coolbaugh was made postmaster without petition. For substantiation I refer to Peter St. Clair, now of Osceola, Nebr., and A. B. Noble, of this city. Others can also be found who were cognizant of the transaction.

(2) Ever since Mr. Coolbaugh has been postmaster there has been great complaint that letters and packages were not promptly delivered. This has become so common that people speak of it daily almost. The fault is mainly attributable to incompetent help. My paper (the Democratic News) is carefully mailed by a machine that can not miss a name, and yet scarcely a week passes without complaint of non-delivery.

Mrs. M. K. Arnold, milliner, complains that letters have been detained, and, she thinks, tampered with while in this office. Two packages were detained, the contents of one spoiling and the other (a piece of goods) being kept until after she had bought elsewhere, and after she had called for them and been notified of their transmission. When obtained finally, the clerk admitted that they had been there some time but were forgotten.

John Towns has two letters, one of which laid here several days, and the other (an important business letter) was sent to the Dead-Letter Office at Washington, returned to the writer, and again sent to Dr. Towns. Mr. Towns has been here all the time, and is a daily caller for mail matter. He has these letters, with the original envelopes to show dates.

Ed. Reals, of this city, was recently standing by the general-delivery window, waiting his turn, when he heard the following conversation: "Anything for me?" "Nothing," was the reply of the clerk. "Well, there ought to be," said the stranger, "and I know there is." Mr. Coolbaugh, who was standing near the window, spoke up and said, "How do you know?" The stranger replied, "Because I always get a letter about this time in the month." "I think we ought to know something about it if there is one here," said Mr. C. "Well, suppose you look," said the man. And they found two letters for the gentleman.

I frequently get mail from my box that does not belong to me. Plenty of cases can be found proving incompetency.

Respectfully submitted,

GEO. WISE.

SUPPLEMENTAL CHARGES.

Recently, Mrs. Mary Lane, while at Tabor, this county, sent a letter to relatives near Hamburg, containing a sum of money, addressed to W. T. Lane, Hamburg, Iowa. A week or two afterward she came down and, in speaking thereof, found that the letter had never been received by W. T. Lane. She then went to the post-office to make inquiry and was told it had not come. She called again in another week and was again told it was not there. She insisted that search be made, and the letter was found pigeon-holed in a place remote from where it should have been, and had been there for several weeks. References: Mary Lane and W. T. Lane.

C. W. Davey, important letter sent to Dead-Letter Office.

S. M. Moss, Hamburg, had letters held twenty days as above, substantially.

Respectfully submitted,

GEO. WISE.

Having forwarded the foregoing application for appointment, accompanied by the charges and specifications preferred by him, Mr. Wise, at subsequent date, addressed to the President the following letter, namely:

HAMBURG, IOWA, June 19, 1885.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT: I am an applicant for the Hamburg postmastership. My application is on file in the Post-Office Department, backed by nearly all of the best business men of this place, including two banking houses and our largest merchants.

Valid charges of incompetency against our present postmaster are also on file.

As to my Democracy and competency, I refer to the personal letters on file. Please appoint me.

Very respectfully,

GEO. WISE.

The foregoing papers were communicated to the committee in compliance with its request by the Postmaster-General prior to the resolution of the Executive Departments not to furnish papers on file affecting suspended officers.

An examination of the papers communicated induced the committee to inform the suspended officer of the character of the charges and specifications made against him, and he was given opportunity to make such answer thereto as he might deem proper. This course seemed to the committee to be, in view of the character of the charges and specifications, demanded by the principles of fair dealing and common justice. Mr. Coolbaugh availed himself of the opportunity afforded him and made specific answer to each charge and specification, and forwarded to the subcommitteeman, who by authority of the committee had communicated with him, the following response, namely:

HAMBURG, FREMONT COUNTY, IOWA, January 23, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In answer to interrogatories Nos. 1 and 2, I refer you to letter No. 1, from Samuel Holmes, editor of Hamburg Times.

No. 3. I, H. C. Coolbaugh, postmaster at that time, was reappointed postmaster by President Arthur on or about January 22, 1885, for four years.

Nos. 4 and 5. I am satisfied that the Democracy of this town did not want a change of postmasters, except some five or six, who wanted the position. I refer to letters Nos. 2, 3, and 4 (J. P. Beach, Dr. D. W. Swiggart, and Dr. Sanborn).

No. 6. He may have had such a building in view. If so, it was "so near and yet so far" he never reached it. On the contrary, his office is not well protected, and has been once broken into since his occupancy of the same.

No. 7. I should have been pleased at any time to have had an investigation made by post-office inspector.

In answer to causes for removal:

No. 1. I think some time in December, 1880, Peter St. Clair, postmaster at Hamburg, Iowa, sent in his resignation. About the same time I made application for the appointment, and was appointed February 18, 1881. P. St. Clair is now living in Nebraska. I have not received his reply to letter sent him in regard to this matter. I refer you to letters No. 1 (S. Holmes and Hon. W. P. Hepburn).

No. 2. In reply I refer you to the following letters—all good business men of this town: Nos. 2, 3, and 4 (J. P. Beach, Dr. Swiggart, and Dr. Sanborn).

Mrs. M. K. Arnold's letter and packages are explained by her letter, No. 5.

John Towns explains by letter No. 6.

Ed. Reals. In this case the man called for his uncle's mail, expecting his own mail would be in the same box. He got his mail the first time he called for it.

Mrs. Mary T. Lane. In this case a letter came to this office addressed to "Mrs. Lane." The mail called for was W. T. Lane. They were strangers to me, consequently the letter to Mrs. Lane was not handed out until I learned who Mrs. Lane was, and then it was delivered.

C. W. Davey's letter sent to dead-letter office is explained by his letter No. 7.

S. M. Moss, bridge-builder, was often out of town for thirty days at one time, and he always left orders not to forward or deliver his mail to any one during his absence.

In conclusion, let me say while I was postmaster I gave the business of the office my whole time and attention personally, and am satisfied I gave general satisfaction, and by a vote of Democratic patrons of the office alone I should have been elected to hold the office. While I am not a politician, and never have been, yet I am a Republican and an old soldier, and

Yours, obediently,

H. C. COOLBAUGH.

Hon. JAS. F. WILSON,
Washington, D. C.

The letters referred to in the foregoing statements are here given in the order in which they are therein named, and in addition thereto one since received from Mr. St. Clair, mentioned in paragraph 1 of Mr. Coolbaugh's answer to "causes for removal." The letters are as follows, namely:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of January 15.

I did not know of Mr. Coolbaugh's appointment or candidacy for the post-office at Hamburg, Iowa, until I saw a statement of the same in the newspapers. A charge by certain persons, some four or more years ago, that there was a bargain between St. Clair, the predecessor of Coolbaugh, and the latter, by which a payment was made to St. Clair to step out in the interest of Coolbaugh, was investigated by an inspector from the General Post-Office Department, and found to be without any foundation. At that time no one pretended that I had participation, knowledge, or interest in the matter. The statement is a lie suggested by some of the later liars of Fremont County.

I am satisfied that no such arrangement was made by Messrs. St. Clair and Coolbaugh, but that the whole story is a malicious fabrication.

Your friend,

W. P. HEPBURN.

SAMUEL HOLMES, Esq., Hamburg, Iowa.

HAMBURG, IOWA, 1 (18), 1886.

I bought the Hamburg Times and paid for it individually before H. C. Coolbaugh was appointed postmaster at this place. He afterward became associated with me in the office, and remained so for a year or so. The Times Publishing Company was organized with Holmes, Natson Brothers, and Coolbaugh. Mr. Coolbaugh never had a controlling interest and never was authorized and never did dictate the policy of the paper, and was at no time responsible for its policy. I never had anything to do with any compact or anything else with Hon. W. P. Hepburn., M. C., whereby Mr. Coolbaugh should be appointed postmaster at this place. I know that during his term of office Mr. Coolbaugh kept almost aloof from politics, save the casting of his ballot at elections. I know further that he attended personally and strictly to the duties of the office all the time, and to no other business whatever. I know further that I heard of no complaints of any kind about the office until after Cleveland's election, and then from nobody but applicants for the position and half a dozen of their assistants. I thought then, and think now, they were gotten up for the occasion.

I know further that there has been more complaint of incompetency in the Hamburg post-office since the present incumbent took charge than all the time Coolbaugh was in office.

SAM'L HOLMES.

P. S.—I also know that a more bitter, uncompromising, and inconsistent partisan could not be found in this county than the present incumbent.

SAM'L HOLMES.

[Letter No. 2.]

HAMBURG, IOWA, January 19, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have lived in Hamburg eighteen years; have known H. C. Coolbaugh, ex-postmaster at this place, for twenty-two years.

Am agent for twenty-six fire and life insurance companies, and cashier of the Farmers and Merchants' Bank of Hamburg, and undoubtedly send and receive the largest mails of any firm in the city.

I simply mention these facts that I may say, in justice to Mr. Coolbaugh, that his management of the Hamburg post-office was always efficient; that at no time before or since his service has there been so few errors in our mails. He is regarded, alike by Republicans and Democrats, as the best man that has filled the office in the history of the town.

He gave personal attention to all the details of the office, bringing to his work a tireless energy, courtesy, and a conscientiousness that made him invaluable to the public.

I am confident there is not a prominent Democrat in Hamburg that would not indorse every word of this letter.

Most respectfully, yours,

J. P. BEACH.

Hon. JAMES F. WILSON,
Washington, D. C.

[Letter No. 3.]

HAMBURG, IOWA, January 16, 1886.

To all whom it may concern:

That I have lived in Hamburg, Iowa, for twenty years and have been intimately acquainted with H. C. Coolbaugh for sixteen years, and know him to be an accommodating, active, good business man, honest, just, and upright in all his transactions. I make this statement because there have been false charges made in order to get him removed from the post-office. I have made some inquiry in regard to the charges, and am satisfied that there is not one word of truth in them, and am also free to say that there never has been a postmaster in Hamburg since I have lived here who has given as good satisfaction as H. C. Coolbaugh has. I do not say this because he is a Republican, for I am of a different persuasion, but I say it because it is the truth (and sometimes I find honest Republicans).

D. W. SWIGGART.

HAMBURG, IOWA, January 15, 1886.

HONORABLE SIR: In the matter of the efficiency of Mr. H. C. Coolbaugh, until recently postmaster in this place, I have to say that I have an extensive correspondence, by virtue of my office as a member of the State board of dental examiners, to say nothing of my private mail matter.

I have occasion to visit the post-office on the arrival of every mail, so that I write whereof I know when I say Mr. Coolbaugh was a most efficient public officer, and that he filled the place with honor, and with as universal satisfaction as falls to the lot of man.

The trouble with Mr. Coolbaugh was that he was too loyal to the Union during the rebellion, and was and is to-day a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, which is an unpardonable sin in the eyes of the Democracy, and the real cause for the charge of "partisan" so universally preferred against every Union-loving postmaster who was holding office at the advent of the present administration.

I have read the charges preferred against Mr. Coolbaugh, and I have reason to believe they have been like the mole-hill that was magnified into a mountain; they have little or no foundation in fact.

I am, most respectfully, yours,

J. F. SANBORN.

Hon. JAMES F. WILSON.

HAMBURG, IOWA, January 14, 1886.

In regard to the letter being tampered with, as referred to in the charges against postmaster Coolbaugh, I have to say that I sometimes sent other members of the family for my mail, and they brought the letter referred to, but did not hand it to me until next morning. The box detained was not detained in the post-office, but by the shippers until the third mail after I looked for it. I did not buy elsewhere before I got it. The box entirely spoiled was some bulbs and roots. I cast no blame on Mr. Coolbaugh for it. I have known him for twelve years, and believe he is honorable and honest in all his dealings and an efficient and obliging postmaster.

MRS. M. K. ARNOLD.

[Letter No. 6.]

I, John Towns, say that I am the John Towns referred to in the charges against Postmaster Coolbaugh. I had a letter lie in the post-office for a few days, but I find no fault with Mr. Coolbaugh, because I was away from this place to Riverton, Rock Point, and other places longer than that at a time, and I presume I was away then. Nobody was authorized to get my mail but myself, and I never gave orders to forward my mail. I had a letter sent to the Dead-Letter Office. It was sent by me from Hamburg to John Samuels, Riverton, Iowa. Samuels did not get it, and it went from Riverton, Iowa, to the Dead-Letter Office, and from the Dead-Letter Office back to me. This is all the letters I had sent to the Dead-Letter Office.

JOHN TOWNS.

Mr. Coolbaugh's manner of conducting the post-office in Hamburg was always satisfactory to me, and I never heard others find any fault with him.

JOHN TOWNS.

[Letter No. 7.]

HAMBURG, IOWA, January 26, 1886.

To whom it may concern:

Whilst Mr. H. C. Coolbaugh was postmaster at this place a letter addressed to C. W. Downey was sent to Dead Letter Office. It proved afterwards to be mine; but I attached no blame whatever on Mr. Coolbaugh. Can not give any reason for its use against him. I consider him one of the best and most efficient postmasters I have ever had any dealings with.

C. W. DAVEY.

[Letter of Peter St. Clair.]

OSCEOLA, NEBR., January 12, 1886.

DEAR SIR: As to the matter you write about, I would just say that I sold the Fremont Times to you unconditionally, and the sale of the post-office boxes had nothing to do with it. Had Coolbaugh not been appointed postmaster at Hamburg, still you would have owned the Times. Mr. Coolbaugh had nothing to do with the sale of the Times, nor in the purchase of it, so far as I know. Mr. Hepburn was not yet a member of Congress when the sale was made of either the paper or the post-office fixtures, and was never consulted by me, directly or indirectly, about the appointment of H. C. Coolbaugh as postmaster. The sale of the boxes made in January or February of 1881, however, was conditional. The condition was that if he was not appointed postmaster the bargain of sale was null and void.

I sold boxes, &c., to Coolbaugh conditionally for $350, and to you the Fremont Times unconditionally. I have referred to no notes, but am positively certain that these statements are substantially true.

Yours, &c.,

P. ST. CLAIR.

S. HOLMES.

It was fortunate for the suspended officer that his case reached the committee before the executive department resolved not to place the papers upon which suspensions are based in its possession for inspection. The papers in this case were communicated to the committee by the Postmaster-General. This enabled the committee to inform the suspended officer of the nature of the charges lodged against him, and afforded him an opportunity to respond to the same. The effectiveness of the suspended officer's response to the charges and specifications presented to the President and Postmaster-General will not be questioned by any impartial mind. He did not rest his defense on his own personal denial, nor qualify its force by the introduction of counter-charges against his accuser. He went directly to the parties upon whose alleged grievances the person nominated to the Senate as his successor had based his charges, and the result of his action is given in the letters of said parties hereinbefore set out. These letters he forwarded to the committee in support of his specific answers to the charges and specifications upon which he was suspended. These are autograph letters of the parties, and disclose the fact that the said charges and specifications have no foundation of truth on which to rest.

In view of the foregoing state of facts, the committee can but conclude that George Wise, the person nominated by the President, is not entitled to favorable consideration by the Senate. For the Senate to advise and consent to his appointment by the President would but encourage the presentation of unfounded charges against public officers. The practice is bad enough when the office is sought by a person not a party to the formulation and presentation of the false charges. It is much worse when the applicant for the office is also the accuser, as in the present case

The nomination of George Wise to be postmaster at Hamburg, Iowa, vice H. C. Coolbaugh, suspended, is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it be not confirmed.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected by the Senate April 20, 1886.

A. B. Keith, nominated to be postmaster at Denison, in the county of Crawford and State of Iowa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MARYLAND CLERGYMEN VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order and findings of fact by that court in the case of the corporation of Roman Catholic clergymen of the State of Maryland against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

AMERICUS V. WARR VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copy of order and findings of fact by that court in the case of Americus V. Warr, administrator, &c., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAYBURY, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. VIELE, to attend to important business, till Tuesday morning next.

To Mr. PAYNE, for one week, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I ask for the present consideration of two reports from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Are they privileged reports?

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I presume they are not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to make two reports from the Committee on Accounts for present consideration. The reports will be read, and unless they are privileged the Chair will ask for objections.

MAURICE RUDDLESDEN.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Maurice Ruddlesden in one of the general appropriation bills the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from January 1, 1886, to June 30, 1886.

The SPEAKER. This is not a privileged report. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There was no objection.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARRY BARTON.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I am also instructed by the Committee on Accounts to report back the resolution which I send to the desk with a substitute therefor.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Harry Barton $600, being the difference between his pay as a folder at $900 per annum and that of a clerk in the folding-room at $1,200, from March 10, 1884, to March 10, 1886; and the amount herein authorized and directed shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and shall be immediately available, subject to the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Harry Barton, in one of the general appropriation bills, the sum of $600, it being the difference between his pay as a folder and that of a clerk in the office of the folding-room, from March 10, 1884, to March 10, 1886.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report, as the resolution provides for payment out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be a word of explanation of this resolution, though I do not understand it to be imperative, but rather in the nature of a request.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the only word of explanation which I have to offer, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], is that this resolution is in pursuance of the course which has governed the House in similar cases heretofore, notably the case of Patrick Dolan. In that case the Committee on Appropriations was requested to provide in one of the general appropriation bills for paying to Patrick G. Dolan the difference between his pay as a laborer and the pay of a messenger. This resolution is strictly in accordance with the precedents that have governed the House in similar cases.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman please state the reason for this proposed appropriation claim? Did this man perform the services of a clerk, and is that the reason this pay is to be given to him, or is it a gratuity?

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. He performed the service, as I am advised. There was value received by the House for the compensation which is claimed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I care very little for precedents. We have precedents for every expenditure—bad precedents. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland whether this man got pay for the labor he performed?

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Not as a clerk.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Why not?

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I do not know. It appears that he was assigned to certain duty, and was paid in accordance with the standing which that service gave him on the roll; but he performed other services for which he has not been paid.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I can answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER]. This man was appointed on the rolls of the House as a laborer. It became necessary, in order to carry on the business of the House, that he should be assigned to the discharge of a higher and more responsible duty, and he was so assigned, and he performed that duty. This is simply a proposition to pay for services according to their value—services actually rendered to the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then, Mr. Speaker, according to the gentleman's statement, this man was appointed to a place when there was no authority to make the appointment.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. On that point I am not advised. This resolution sets forth the character of the service rendered and the amount of compensation asked for. I assume, and I think it can be shown, that the service for which this compensation is asked was rendered strictly and entirely in accordance with requirements of the business of the House, and that the duties to which the claimant was assigned were of a much more onerous character than those belonging to the position to which he was originally appointed. I submit the resolution with this word of explanation; but if any further explanation is desired I shall be glad to make it if I can.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is objectionable, first, because it appears clearly that the assignment of this employé to duties which did not belong to the place to which he was appointed was made without authority. If, as stated here, he was assigned to perform the duties of one grade when he was carried on the rolls as of another grade, that is a kind of precedent which we do not want repeated.

When he accepted a place on the roll in the grade to which he was appointed, he accepted it, I presume, knowing what the pay was and knowing that he was entitled to the pay of that grade and not of a higher one, even though he might perform other services. I think we should adhere to our own rules and require the officers of the House to adhere to them also.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, of the circumstances governing the employment of this particular party I am not advised. It is apparent, however, and it is set forth in the resolution itself, that he did discharge faithfully the services which were required of him in a different capacity from that in which he was originally employed and for which he received pay. I assume further that it was not at his own voluntary instance that he performed the duties of a clerk, but that he was required to do so by the exigencies of the case. It is simply a question for the House whether or not the laborer is worthy of his hire. The service appears to have been faithfully rendered, and I sincerely hope that this resolution will pass.

The question was taken on the substitute proposed by the committee, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, called for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 18.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] to act as tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask that the resolution, or whatever is before the House, be read for information.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the substitute.

The substitute was again read.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 26.

Mr. COBB. For the purpose of saving time, I withdraw the point that no quorum has voted.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. SENEY, in pursuance of leave heretofore granted, submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary upon House bills Nos. 88, 594, 3704, and Senate bill No. 6 relative to increasing the salaries of United States district judges; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority of the committee.

MARGARET F. RYAN.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1249) for the relief of Margaret T. Ryan, and that the same be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropiated, to Margaret T. Ryan, late widow of George F. Cole, late a private in Company F, Fifty-first Regiment of New York Infantry Volunteers, the amount due the said George F. Cole for military services rendered by him from the 15th day of August, 1864, to the 25th day of July, 1865; also commutation for rations and clothing not drawn by him while a prisoner of war, from the 30th day of September, 1864, to the date of the discharge of his regiment from the service, July 25, 1865; and, further, to pay to her such bounty as she is by existing law entitled on account of the services of the said George F. Cole as aforesaid.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

Mr. STRAIT. The name which appears in the title and the body of the bill, "Margaret T. Ryan," should be "Margaret F. Ryan." I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was passed.

Mr. STRAIT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF ELECTORAL-COUNT BILL.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 6th day of May, 1886, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions, be set apart for the consideration of Senate bill No. 9, to provide for and regulate the electoral count; not to interfere with revenue or general appropriation bills, the river and harbor bill, nor with prior orders, nor with the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Lands under the special order; and if the consideration of said Senate bill No. 9 be displaced, then the next day not previously set apart shall be devoted to its consideration until the same shall be disposed of, subject to the above-mentioned interference.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution; which was adopted.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration House Miscellaneous Document No. 31, a resolution "that the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of Leander A. Robb, late an employé of this House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed $250," report the same back with the following amendments: In the fourth line, strike out the words "necessary funeral," and insert after the word "expenses" the words "of his last illness and funeral."

The deceased had been employed for several years in the Clerk's document-room and was a faithful and intelligent servant of the House. He died on April 10, 1885, and the allowance proposed to be made to his widow, who is in needy circumstances, and for funeral expenses, is the usual allowance made by the House in case of the death of any of its employés. Captain Robb had been a brave soldier in the Union Army, and left a leg on the battlefield as a proof of his courage and patriotism.

Your committee recommend the passage of the resolution as amended.

Any court now being held in said district pursuant to any act of Congress may be continued in the same manner and with like effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. CASWELL. The only change made in the present law is to postpone the October term of court to November. There can be no possible objection to the bill. The committee were unanimous, and if there be no questions asked, I will call for a vote.

Mr. OATES. Both the Representatives from the State of Florida, all the lawyers practicing in that court, and the people interested desire this bill to be passed. It merely changes the time of holding court. The report from the committee is unanimous.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. CASWELL. I call up from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7216) to provide for holding terms of United States district and circuit courts in the district of Nebraska.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the United States district and circuit courts for the district of Nebraska shall be held at the following places: Omaha, Lincoln, Hastings, Nebraska City, Norfolk, and Falls City. At Omaha, two terms each year, to begin on the first Tuesday in January and June; at Lincoln, two terms each year, to begin on the first Tuesday in March and September; at Hastings, two terms each year, to begin on the first Tuesday in April and October; at Nebraska City, two terms each year, to begin on the third Tuesday in April and October; at Norfolk, one term each year, to begin on the first Tuesday in November; and at Falls City, one term each year, to begin on the first Tuesday in December. One grand and one petit jury shall be summoned to serve at each term herein provided for.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire, by instructions of the Judiciary Committee, to offer two amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "December," in line 14, insert "and at Kearney, one term each year, to begin on the second Tuesday of May."
After "Falls City," in line 6, add "Kearney."

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to tell from the rapid reading of the bill how many places there are at which courts are to be held in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. CASWELL. Four or five. At the present time there are only two. They were established at a very early day near the eastern line of the State. Since that time population has spread out and the business of the courts has so enlarged that it is thought necessary that provision should be made for these additional terms of court in the interest of economy and convenience. I think the bill is unanimously agreed upon by the delegation and by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is not the gentleman mistaken as to the number of places? I think there are six.

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, six.

Mr. HOLMAN. I admit that where there is admiralty business to be transacted there is a reason for the establishment of a Federal court, but I think experience demonstrates in most of the States where courts have been multiplied, where there is no maritime jurisdiction, nothing to require the presence of the United States court or to exclude the authority of the State courts, the system does not operate beneficially. I concede that while we admit non-resident corporations to go into our Federal courts without restriction, there is here and there some excuse for inland Federal courts at points away from the borders of lakes or seas, but as a general proposition it seems to me that instead of multiplying Federal courts with their attendant expenses unnecessarily, we ought rather to reduce the number. The expenses of such courts are quite large; there has got to be a building rented in which the court shall be held, a clerk's office, and a marshal's office, and of course, in the progress of time and at quite an early day, there must be a public building erected for the accommodation of the courts. The expense of the judicial system grows steadily, and it seems to me that our policy should be the reverse of that. I think the policy of establishing so many Federal courts as six in the State of Nebraska, eight in the State of Iowa, and four in the State of Indiana is wrong; I think it is moving in the wrong direction. We seem to be magnifying the Federal jurisdiction year after year at the expense of the proper local State jurisdiction. I must say that I regret very much to see this tendency to the multiplication of Federal courts and to the rapid increase of the expense of the Federal judicial system.

When we have no bankrupt law to administer, when the cases growing out of the revenue system are diminishing year by year, I think that instead of an increase there should be a steady decrease of the appliances connected with the Federal judicial system. A State like Nebraska, it seems to me, does not require so many Federal courts. That State is bordered on one side, it is true, by a great river, but four of these courts are to be at places entirely inland. In Indiana there are four places where Federal courts are held, three more than are necessary, although the State is bordered by the Ohio River and at one point by Lake Michigan. Instead of encouraging the increase of Federal courts I think our policy ought to be to restrict the jurisdiction of those courts to what is fair and reasonable in view of the rights of the States and the importance of having the judicial power exercised as far as possible at home among the people in the local State courts.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, the committee considered all those points, and yet were of opinion that on the whole expense would not be increased, while these additional courts would greatly add to the public convenience. I call for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the amendment submitted by Mr. CASWELL was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CASWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF CUSTOM-HOUSE OATHS.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 1597) to amend section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, amended so that the said section shall read as follows:

"SEC. 2805. All oaths to be taken upon making of any of the reports or entries or respecting any of the acts mentioned in this chapter, whether by a master of any vessel or the owner or consignee of any merchandise, his factor or agent, or by any other person, shall be administered by the collector or officer to or with whom the report or entry is made, or by any notary public, and shall be reduced to writing and subscribed by the person taking and by the person administering the oath."

Mr. COLLINS. The only change in the law contemplated is to allow notaries public to administer custom-house oaths.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up House bill No. 5196, reported by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The bill (H. R. 5196) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of California and create the United States judicial court of Southern California, was read.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this bill has received the approval of the entire delegation from California. It was reported from the Judiciary Committee without dissent. I do not know that I desire to say anything in regard to the bill, but am ready to answer any question. If no gentleman desires discussion, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is hardly worth while to call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill provides for an increase in the number of United States judges; and the payment of the salaries of this increased number of judges involves, of course, an additional expenditure of public money. It is not amiss, perhaps, for me to say that the Committee on the Judiciary has reported a bill which provides for increasing to $5,000 the salaries of judges of the United States where the amount is less than that sum, this increase involving an increased expenditure of about $40,000 in round figures.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. My point of order is that this bill, as it involves an increase of expenditure, can not be considered in the House, but must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. If that point had been made immediately after the reading of the bill, and before the House had entered upon its consideration, the Chair thinks he would have been obliged to sustain it; but the consideration of the bill in the House has been entered upon.

Mr. BENNETT. We have provided for an increase of salaries—not a graduated increase proportioned to the labor performed, but an absolute increase all along the line; and we have treated this question as if the rights of men as salary earners were to be determined by their wants as salary spenders. I want this House to understand that we are lighting the candle at both ends——

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will permit, as we do not desire the entire hour consumed in the discussion of this bill, I will withdraw it for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the bill.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up House bill No. 2996, reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER].

The bill (H. R. 2996) to amend the Revised Statutes of the United States establishing the times, places, and provisions for holding terms of the district court in the northern district of New York, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That that paragraph of section 572 of the Revised Statutes declaring the times and places and provisions providing terms of the district court in the northern district of New York be amended so as to read as follows:

"In the northern district of New York, at Albany, on the third Tuesday in January; at Utica, on the third Tuesday in March; at Rochester, on the second Tuesday in May; at Buffalo, on the third Tuesday in September; at Auburn, on the third Tuesday in November; at Binghamton, on the third Tuesday in December; and, in the discretion of the judge of the court, one term annually at such time and place within the counties of Onondaga, Saint Lawrence, Clinton, Jefferson, Oswego, and Franklin as he may from time to time appoint. Such appointment shall be made by notice of at least twenty days, published in the State —— of New York, and in one newspaper published at the place where said court is to be held."

Mr. PARKER. There is a verbal amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "State," in the seventeenth line, insert "paper."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this bill increases the number of places at which courts are to be held.

Mr. PARKER. It does; but it involves no additional expense whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. How many new courts are provided for?

Mr. PARKER. One, at the city of Binghamton, which is to accommodate the southern tier. The bill calls for no expense.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PARKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of the court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve points of order on the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that this bill creates a new office, and otherwise provides for the expenditure of money. Under the rule, it must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House without going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TUCKER. Then I withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is withdrawn, but under the point of order it will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORY SOUTH OF KANSAS.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up House bill No. 679, to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas; and I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The Committee on the Judiciary has authorized me to ask that Senate bill No. 624, relating to this same subject, be substituted for this bill of the House.

The SPEAKER. If the Senate bill has been reported, the gentleman moves to consider the Senate bill?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair finds on examination that the Senate bill has never been reported to the House or referred to the committee.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I supposed it had been reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can call up the House bill, and if unanimous consent be given that bill can be laid aside and the Senate bill be considered in its place.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to lay aside the House bill and consider the Senate bill upon the same subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The House bill will be read, and after that the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas.

Be it enacted, &c., That the laws of the United States are hereby extended over the unorganized territory south of the States of Kansas and Colorado and between the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico, known as the Public Land strip; and that for the purpose of the execution of said laws said Public Land strip is annexed to the judicial district of Kansas and to the southwestern land district in said State; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause the subdivisional lines of townships in said Public Land strip to be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That said lands shall be subject to entry only by actual settlers under the homestead laws; and that no patent shall be issued for any lands so entered until after five years' actual residence thereon, to be ascertained under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is now pending before the Committee on Public Lands of the House. The gentleman asks to discharge that committee from its further consideration, lay aside the House bill, and consider the Senate bill.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made, the House bill is before the House, together with the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Very well; then I ask for the consideration of the House bill and the amendment at this time.

Mr. RYAN. Is the House bill or the Senate bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. Objection having been made to laying it aside, the House bill is before the House, with the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RYAN. I suggest to my friend from Ohio the bill be amended so as to strike out all after the words "homestead laws," in the proviso. The proviso is these lands shall be subject to entry only by settlers under the homestead laws, and then there is some additional matter which should be stricken out.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is the reason why I wished to get at the Senate bill, in order to make the change proposed.

Mr. RYAN. I move then to strike out these words:

And that no patent shall be issued for any lands so entered until after five years' actual residence thereon, to be ascertained under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SPRINGER. As this bill provides for disposing of public lands, must it not have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand it proposes to donate public lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. It provides, as I understand, for the disposition of them.

The SPEAKER. That is not the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has the bill been read?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. No; the House bill has been read, but the Senate bill has not been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the bill provide for expenditure for survey of public lands?

Mr. RYAN. All the bill proposes to do is to extend the laws of the United States over this Public Land strip, where there is no law now whatever, and to attach it to Kansas for judicial purposes. It opens that little strip to settlement exclusively under the homestead laws.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause the subdivisional lines of townships in said Public Land strip to be surveyed under current appropriations for the surveying service.

Mr. SPRINGER. It goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if it makes appropriation.

The SPEAKER. But it makes no appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that portion of the bill, if there is such a provision, requiring all these lands to be disposed of under the homestead laws will be read.

The SPEAKER. That is in the proviso.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is the amendment proposed by the committee and recommended by the Interior Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read.

The Clerk read the proviso, as follows:

Provided, however, That said lands shall be subject to entry only by actual settlers under the homestead laws; and that no patent shall be issued for any lands so entered until after five years' actual residence thereon, to be ascertained under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out that portion of the committee's amendment just read, after the words "homestead laws."

The Chair is informed objection is withdrawn to taking up the Senate bill in place of the House bill. Is it renewed?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; I renew it.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. I understand the last proposition read by the Clerk is an amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having the matter in charge whether he proposes to renew that amendment to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is not before the House.

A MEMBER. The Senate bill contains it.

Mr. PAYSON. I beg pardon, it does not.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is not before the House, objection having been made.

Mr. RYAN. I move to strike out all after the words "homestead laws," in the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, for the reason that what follows provides there must be an actual residence of five continuous years. That would exclude the soldiers.

Mr. PAYSON. They may be excepted.

Mr. RYAN. If my friend is going to require a new system in addition to the homestead law, I should like to hear some good reason for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that the homestead law now allows the taking of the title by a soldier within a comparatively short period. The effect of this would be to require a legal residence of five years upon the land. Now I admit that an exception should be made in favor of the soldiers as the law stands; and I suggest, therefore, that he modify his amendment so as to provide that the law touching the rights of soldiers who served in the Army of the United States shall not be impaired.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There seems to be no difference between the gentlemen in reference to the bill, but they are consuming a great deal of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend as I have suggested.

Mr. RYAN. That meets my approval.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. RYAN. In view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana I withdraw my amendment, with the understanding that his amendment is pending.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, further, That the provisions of law touching the rights of soldiers to enter public lands under the homestead law shall not be impaired.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can the bill be read as proposed to be amended? I would like to have it read.

Mr. MILLER. I have an amendment pending——

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The bill was again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what is the occasion of the proviso he has added?

Mr. HOLMAN. The occasion is——

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill.

Mr. RYAN. I do not believe there is any objection to the bill, and if the gentleman will not withdraw it I am sure it can be passed.

Mr. TUCKER. I will call it up hereafter. I now withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the bill.

DISTRICT JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT, ALABAMA.

Mr. TUCKER. I now call up House bill No. 28.

The SPEAKER. It is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. OATES. I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House require it to be considered there. The gentleman might ask unanimous consent.

Mr. OATES. Then I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will be read.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill; and pending that I move that all debate upon the paragraph under consideration and all amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill; and by order of the House all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE], upon which the committee was dividing.

The Clerk will report the amendment on which the division was being taken.

Insert after the word "State," in line 477:

"By proceeding in the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania in the manner provided for the taking and condemning of lands for railroad purposes under the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania entitled 'An act regulating railroad companies,' approved February 19, 1849, and the supplement thereto, so far as the same may be applicable."

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following addition to that amendment, in order that the committee may vote upon the two together.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read from the desk, after which the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to add, after the word "applicable" in the amendment, the following:

"Provided, That no title to the condemned property shall vest in the United States, nor shall the United States be bound to pay the value fixed thereon until report of such condemnation proceedings has been made to and approved by Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. REAGAN. I shall object to anything that looks to the adoption of that provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the pending amendment, upon which the point of order was made that no quorum had voted.

The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, as tellers.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman who raised the point of order was Mr. COBB, as I understand it, who is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that it was the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I think Mr. COBB raised the point of order, and as he is not present pressing it, I presume that it would not be considered as insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana made the point of order, and insists upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the amendment be again reported before the vote is taken.

The amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 35.

Mr. HOLMAN (one of the tellers). I do not insist on further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The point as to a quorum is withdrawn, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BOYLE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAYNE. Has my colleague any objection to my offering my amendment at this time?

Mr. BOYLE. I have no objection if it does not come out of my time.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "applicable," in the amendment just adopted, insert: "Provided, That no title to the condemned property shall vest in the United States, nor shall the United States be bound to pay the value fixed thereon until the report of said condemnation proceedings has been made to and approved by Congress."

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph of this bill looking to the acquisition by the United States of title to the property of the Monongahela Improvement Company has excited a good deal of feeling, and has provoked some gentlemen who have engaged in the debate to use strong words in opposition to it. One gentleman [Mr. HEWITT] has characterized it as the most "impudent" proposition he has known to be introdueed into Congress during his long term of service; and another gentleman, I am sorry to say a Pennsylvanian [Mr. KELLEY], has characterized the arguments made in favor of the provision as "infamous."

Mr. KELLEY. If my colleague will permit me to say it, I was referring to the provision which has been stricken from the bill, and I reaffirm what I stated.

Mr. BOYLE. I will say to my respected friend that his use of that word as applicable to an argument made by any member of this House appears to me to be unwarranted.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I submit that the gentleman can not raise a point of order while another gentleman is on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I wish to know what amendment is now pending, whether the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], or the amendment which I submitted yesterday; because as I understood the statement made by the Chair the amendment which has just been submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was to be received as taking precedence of mine.

The CHAIRMAN. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts the Chair will cause the Clerk to read the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that my amendment takes precedence.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman from Massachusetts has no amendment before the committee. When the gentleman proposed his amendment on yesterday and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] offered his amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts withdrew his until the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky could be acted upon.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I know what I am talking about. He withdrew it with the statement that he would offer it afterward. Now he has not reoffered it, and before he reoffers it the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] offered his amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. If I may make an explanation, I will state that this is the posture of this matter: When I first proposed to offer my amendment there were two amendments pending, that of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] being second. I offered to withdraw mine until a vote was taken on the amendment which appears in the italics in the bill. When that vote was taken I handed in my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts has correctly stated the situation. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] will proceed.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman who characterized this as an impudent proposition went further, and made what appears to me to be an unjustifiable attack on the persons engaged in the mining of coal along the Monongahela River. He spoke of it as the region where the strikes had recently taken place and of the coal operators as the persons responsible for the introduction of Hungarian and other pauper labor. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] knows a good deal, but he does not know much about the Monongahela River coal region. There is no Hungarian labor employed on the Monongahela River, nor in the mining of the coal carried on on that river.

Mr. HEWITT. I will state to the gentleman that I was assured by three directors of that company that the Hungarian laborers were there and in pool No. 4.

Mr. BOYLE. That is in my county. If they are there, they must have come at a very recent date.

Mr. HEWITT. General or Colonel Sweitzer, Mr. Wood, and another, whose name I do not remember, were the three gentlemen who assured me that was true.

Mr. BOYLE. I know the gentlemen named very well.

Mr. HEWITT. I give my authority.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman made his statement yesterday and has his authority to-day. That, however, Mr. Chairman, is not very material, and I do not see how it should affect this proposition.

The gentlemen from New York went further. I remember having heard him make a speech in the last Congress in which he said he was informed of the fact—perhaps he said he knew the fact—that miners were working in the mines of Pennsylvania for 75 cents a day.

Mr. HEWITT. I know it.

Mr. BOYLE. It is not and has not been the fact as to the Monongahela region. The gentleman knows something about Pennsylvania because he himself employs labor in that State; and he may therefore know that in his locality miners work for 75 cents a day; but in this region which the gentleman has spoken of so harshly they make double that amount of wages, and still, perhaps, not as much as they ought to receive; and they are not Hungarians or Italians or "pauper" laborers of any kind, but intelligent, industrious American citizens.

Mr. HEWITT. Why did they strike?

Mr. BOYLE. Because they wanted more.

Mr. HEWITT. That is right.

Mr. BOYLE. That was right; and so far as I know that was the only reason for the strike.

Mr. HEWITT. Are they satisfied now?

Mr. BOYLE. I hope they are, as I see by yesterday's papers that the "operators," the men on whose account the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] would defeat this measure, have voluntarily and without solicitation made an increase in wages of from 5 to 16 per cent.

Mr. HEWITT. How long did the strike last before they agreed to make the advance?

Mr. BOYLE. They made the advance demanded by the men; and now I am glad to see that they have made this additional advance voluntarily.

Mr. HEWITT. How long were the men out before they got any advance?

Mr. BOYLE. I do not know. Perhaps not longer than the car-drivers were out in the city of New York. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. They were out about four months.

Mr. BOYLE. Well, sir; that is not material.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BRUMM was recognized, and yielded to Mr. BOYLE.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Chairman, I want to state one or two facts that are material. The Monongahela River runs through the States of West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The part of it in Pennsylvania has been improved by the Monongahela Navigation Company, under a charter granted by the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1836. The original capital was fixed at $180,000, with the right of indefinite increase. I understand it is now over $1,000,000.

One of the provisions of that charter was that after a lapse of a certain time, a few years, the State of Pennsylvania should have the right to take the improvements of the company upon paying the cost of their construction and interest at the rate of 6 per cent. up to the time of the taking, deducting therefrom the earnings of the company; so that this company, when it took possession of this river and improved it, did so with the understanding and agreement that the improvements might be taken from it for public use upon being reimbursed, as before stated. Therefore we do it no wrong and no injustice if we now take the property in the manner proposed. The company has had it many years longer than it supposed it would be allowed to hold it under the terms of its charter. True, it is not proposed that the State of Pennsylvania shall take possession. But as the General Government has the undoubted right to take charge of this improvement by virtue of the right to control the navigable rivers of the country, and as the company must have contemplated the surrender of its property and franchises, I can not see that it matters to it whether the works go to the State or to the United States, provided it is compensated in the manner provided in the charter.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has spoken of this river as if it were not navigable. Why, sir, it was navigable before the Monongahela improvement was thought of. It is navigable in certain seasons of the year, and a good part of the year, far above the improvements made in West Virginia; and in the fall and spring and winter steamboats run to Morgantown, and sometimes as far as Fairmount, on the Baltimore and Ohio road, without the aid of locks and dams. So that up to the Pennsylvania State line, to which the improvements of this company extend, and far above it, the river is and has always been navigable for steamboats.

The commerce on the Monongahela is strictly interstate commerce. I thought that fact would commend this proposition to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. It is hardly anything but interstate commerce. The gentleman from Texas, whom I know to hold that a State can not levy taxes or tribute of any kind on commerce between the States, is sustaining the occupancy of the lower Monongahela River by a corporation which levies tolls and taxes upon every pound of freight that passes on this river from West Virginia to Pennsylvania and from Pennsylvania to the States of the West and Southwest.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want the gentleman to assume that I sustain a proposition to appropriate $120,000 in this bill for the benefit of a private corporation. That is practically what he proposes.

Mr. BOYLE. This bill would give to this corporation not one cent. If this whole provision should be adopted the corporation would be wiped out of existence. If the gentlemen opposing it should prevail as to that part providing for the acquisition of the works of the company and the appropriation should be made, it would benefit the company incidentally, but not a dollar of the money appropriated would go to it.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to state another fact. A great reason for making that river free is this—it has not, I believe, been stated, but it was the operative reason with the committee: The Kanawha River has been improved by the General Government, and it is open and free, so that coal from that region comes down and goes out to the lower rivers without paying any tax or toll, while the coal on the Monongahela is taxed enormously for the benefit of a private corporation.

If you compute the toll levied upon the amount of coal taken from an acre you will find that it is an enormous tax; and coal goes out of this river by the acre. Now, the people in the Monongahela Valley desire to be put on an equality with those on the Kanawha. There is no reason why they should not be. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] says that only the coal-land owners will be benefited by this measure. He states it as a proposition not to be questioned or controverted that "things are not sold by what they cost, but at their market value in the market in which they are sold." They are undoubtedly sold "at their market value in the market in which they are sold," but surely their cost is one of the elements which determine that market value. Are not articles carried to the great markets of the world and there sold cheapened by a reduction in the cost of production and in the cost of transportation?

The rule which the gentleman now lays down as axiomatic is not in accordance with the gentleman's present views on the tariff, as I understand them. He certainly maintains that the removal of duties on imported goods will reduce the cost to the consumer. If it will not, who is to be benefited, and why remove them? If we remove the tolls to which this coal is now subject, and thus reduce the cost of taking it to market, certainly upon his tariff views, but not upon his views as to this bill, the consumer will get the benefit of the reduction, as he maintains the consumer would get the benefit if duties were removed.

Mr. HEWITT. The price is made by demand and supply.

Mr. REAGAN. How much would it cost the Government to do that?

Mr. BOYLE. I do not know how much, but not near as much as gentlemen have been made to believe. It will not cost the Government more to take those improvements on the plan proposed than it would to improve the river originally; and there certainly is as much reason for improving the Monongahela as for improving the Kanawha, or any of the other rivers named in the bill, or even the harbor of Galveston. The commerce of the Mononghela is greater and more important than that of Galveston.

Mr. REAGAN. Oh! There is enough cotton shipped from Galveston every year to buy the whole Monongahela.

Mr. BOYLE. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] says that this coal is sold at Pittsburgh.

Mr. HEWITT. I said that the price was made at Pittsburgh.

Mr. BOYLE. Well, the gentleman is mistaken. Only a small part of the coal is sold at Pittsburgh. There is no reason why the price should be fixed there. Four-fifths of it goes down the Ohio and the Mississippi, and reaches all the country along the streams that flow into those rivers. In fact, it is the people in Kentucky and the people along all the Western rivers who are principally interested in having the Monongahela opened up as the Kanawha has been and in having competition between these producing regions.

Mr. HEWITT. Is not the price made at Pittsburgh?

Mr. BOYLE. It is not. The coal passes Pittsburgh without stopping, and goes to all points on the lower rivers.

Mr. HEWITT. But the market value is made in the big market.

Mr. BOYLE. Pittsburgh is not the big market. It is made at the points where the coal is sold. That is shown by the fact that the price differs materially at different points.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It strikes other competition lower down and has to meet it.

Mr. BOYLE. Yes. If we make the Monongahela free, it will enable the people on the lower rivers to get their coal cheaper, because it will put the Monongahela coal producers in a position where they can compete on equal terms with those on the Kanawha and on other rivers.

The Kanawha is several hundred miles nearer to those markets; the coal passes from it without toll, and the Monongahela people, thus handicapped by tolls and distances, are not in condition to compete The difference in the quality of the coals will compensate for the difference in the length of carriage; but it is asking too much that this coal carry the additional weight of tolls.

Take possession of this improvement and throw open the river. Pay only what the improvement is worth. The terms of the charter provide that the company shall sell its works for what they cost, with interest, deducting the dividends. Pay the company according to the terms of the charter, and you will pay no more than you would have paid, not as much as you would have paid, if the improvement of the river had been made by the General Government.

This is an interstate stream. It carries interstate commerce. I know the gentleman from Texas denies the right of a State to levy a tax or toll on interstate commerce; but if he allows this Monongahela Improvement Company to retain possession of that river, he permits the levying of an onerous toll and tax upon interstate commerce—commerce that is nothing but interstate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by striking out the last word. We are now about to vote upon this proposition, and I want the House to understand——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). Debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto was limited to ten minutes, which time has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I wanted to state that this is a proposition to vote $120,000 to a private corporation that has already received more than $100,000 from the Government.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. REAGAN. I know what I say. It is the truth.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Others know the truth as well as yourself.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a point of order. The only thing in order is a vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to have a restatement of the information which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] gave the House, but which some of us did not fully catch, as to the provisions of the charter by which the State of Pennsylvania has the right to repossess itself of this property upon certain terms?

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order but a vote.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think that by striking out the entire paragraph we can get effectually all the information we want.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "war," in line 468, insert "who shall transmit the same to Congress," and strike out the remainder of the paragraph down to and including line 490.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 46.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, tellers will be ordered; and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 34, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. WILLIS. I hope there will be order while that amendment is read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "applicable," in the amendment last adopted, the following:

"Provided, That no title to the condemned property shall vest in the United States, nor shall the United States be bound to pay the value fixed thereon until report of said condemnation proceeding has been made to and approved by Congress."

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 73, noes 8.

Mr. EVERHART. I move to amend by inserting after the word "works," where it occurs in line 404 and also in line 473, the words "franchises and property connected therewith."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 459, the following:

Provided, That the commerce originating along or above the improvements herein appropriated for shall not be subject to tolls on any other part of the river.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This amendment is on the theory——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall not be expended on said river until the navigation shall be made free to the use of all people.

The amendment was adopted, there being ayes 95, noes 21.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to know whether it would be in order to offer an amendment reciting that no appropriation for the harbor at

Galveston shall be used until the wharf company releases its franchise and ceases to charge toll on commerce at that harbor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment when we reach that portion of the bill.

Mr. HEWITT. I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 459. It includes all after the word "dollars," in line 459, down to and including line 490, or, in other words, the original text of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise for the purpose of making an inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. Does not that amendment leave the appropriation in the bill naked—without the other provision?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. [After a pause.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I rose to demand a division before the Chair announced the result.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced the ayes had it and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. As soon as the Chair announced the vote, and before announcing the result, I asked for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. In the great confusion prevailing on the floor the gentleman from Texas was not heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to strike out embrace anything more than the text of the bill?

Mr. RANDALL. Was not the vote declared to be carried in the affirmative?

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to have some understanding about this matter. My amendment was to strike out the whole section, including the appropriation. My amendment to add to the text that no money appropriated under this paragraph should be used until the commerce there was made free was adopted and has been added to the text; but ——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will yield to the Chair the whole matter is easily explainable. The gentleman from Texas has a motion pending to strike out, but before the vote is taken on that amendment all motions looking to the perfection of the text are in order. Pending that motion to strike out he submitted an amendment to add to the section——

Mr. REAGAN. That is it; but it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decided the amendment of the gentleman from New York to strike out was carried, not hearing in the confusion prevailing on the floor the demand of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] for a division. The demand being insisted on, the Chair will recognize it.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to correct the Chair. My amendment was adopted, and then the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] moved to strike out the text from line 459 to line 490, which does not include the words added on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected. A division is demanded.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not understand the force of the motion. The House adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. Now, does this motion of the gentleman from New York strike that out?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. KING. I rise to a point of order, and that is that this House is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken.

Mr. BAYNE. It is impossible to proceed unless we have better order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees most thoroughly with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and hopes the House will come to order.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen in the aisles will be seated.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, to know what the committee is now voting on. I desire to ask if all that is now remaining is not the three lines making an appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. If the proposed amendment of the gentleman from New York be adopted that will be the result, retaining also the words added by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced the amendment of the gentleman from New York was adopted, but the gentleman from Texas stated he demanded a division. On account of the confusion the Chair could not hear the gentleman, and under the circumstances it deems it but fair and just to allow the division to take place.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the motion to strike out all of the original text of the bill after the word "dollars," in line 459? If so, then of course it did not reach the portion added to the text on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we will go on with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to be informed what was the exact motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT. I have been trying to get the attention of the Chair for that purpose. The Clerk properly announced my amendment, which was to strike out all of the text after the word "dollars," in line 459. It does not cover the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas and which was adopted.

Mr. DIBBLE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIBBLE. Whether that motion, if adopted, would strike out any more than the word "and?" Because that is all the rest of that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 459, down to and including line 490.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the call for a division.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How would that leave the paragraph if adopted? Will the Clerk read the paragraph as it will stand if the motion shall be adopted?

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Monongahela River, Pennsylvania and West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $121,200: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall not be expended on said river until the navigation shall be made free to the use of all people.

Mr. BOYLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. BOYLE. Whether the effect of that motion, if adopted, would not be to make an appropriation of $120,000 and provide that it shall not be expended until the river is made "free," with no provision to make it free?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOYLE. Then it is a fraud. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York, upon which a division is asked.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That demand has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It was renewed upon the other side of the House.

Mr. HEMPHILL. But too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HEWITT; and on a division there were—ayes 80, noes 37.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HEWITT, and Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 69.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. I now ask a vote upon my motion to strike out the whole section.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. When the motion of the gentleman from Texas was made on yesterday, which, as I understand, is the motion upon which we are now to vote, the words in Italics had not been inserted in the bill. These words were subsequently inserted on motion of the committee and by a vote of the House. My inquiry is whether the motion to strike out would include those words in Italics also?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion, being a motion to strike out the whole paragraph, and the amendment having been added simply to the paragraph, the motion would include all.

The motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Before passing from that paragraph I want to make an amendment, which I will read myself.

Add after the word "free," in the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], the words:

By the State of Pennsylvania under the charter granted by that State to the Monongahela Navigation Company.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to allow me to suggest a further amendment by adding after the word "Pennsylvania" in his amendment the words "or the United States."

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. BAYNE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] to say that the State of Pennsylvania had the right to do this, and this amendment is for the purpose of trying to point out the mode by which the paragraph may be made effective.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask the gentleman to accept my amendment, that this be made free, by the State of Pennsylvania or by the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. We may have to pay for the whole of it in that case.

Mr. BAYNE. No. The effect would be that the United States would destroy the charter, while the State would not.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that the entire amendment be again read as it will stand if adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall not be expended on said river until the navigation shall be made free (by the State of Pennsylvania, under the charter granted by that State to the Monongahela Navigation Company) to the use of all people.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman from Kentucky will not accept the amendment as I suggest, I offer it as an amendment to the amendment; that is, to add the words "or the United States," after the word "Pennsylvania," in the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think there is a grammatical error in the placing of this amendment. It would seem that it has been inserted by the Clerk at the wrong place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has nothing to do with grammatical errors. [Laughter.]

The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 40, noes 42.

So the amendment of Mr. BAYNE was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was then adopted; there being on a division—ayes 48, noes 41.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. MILLS took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 5254) to increase the pension of George W. Smith.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. WILSON. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk. I hope it will meet the views of both the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 459, strike out all and insert:
"But no charges or tolls shall be collected on any other part of the river on any commerce on said river which originates above the works herein appropriated for."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 14.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

Improving Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: Continuing improvement, $40,000.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to strike out the last word. I have not occupied much time on this paragraph which has just been passed, but I am sure every gentleman will recognize the propriety of my making a brief statement, not to exceed, perhaps, two or three minutes, about this item for the improvement of the Monongahela River.

A MEMBER. That paragraph is passed.

Mr. WILLIS. I am aware it is, and I ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments, not, however, with the view of reversing the vote.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors found the Monongahela River in this condition: There are seven locks and dams owned by a private company at the mouth of the river. For many years the Government of the United States, notwithstanding that fact, has gone ahead and appropriated money for the improvement of the Monongahela River above those seven locks until now. Up to the present date there has been expended by the Government on that work $307,000.

The Government, therefore, was committed to this project before this committee took charge of it. During the present session a delegation came to us from the city of Pittsburgh, headed by the president of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Dravo, and said the burdens on the people of that part of the State because of the monopoly of these charges by this corporation were very heavy, and they asked the committee in the interest of the public to put something in the bill to purchase that franchise from the company. The committee undertook to do this. They believed it was a navigable river, and that the Government had a right to take possession of it, but they did not expect that the Government would take it without paying for it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the expenditures of the Government have increased the tonnage carried?

Mr. WILLIS. That is true, and because of that fact the people living there ask Congress to relieve them of the burden.

Supposing it was an original proposition, and a claim should be made for the Monongahela, as for the Great Kanawha and other rivers, that Congress should purchase the seven locks owned by the Monongahela Company, it would be a question of expediency. There is nothing dark, deceptive, and monstrous in this proposition, unless you say it is monstrous for the Federal Government to resume control of a river which belongs to it. I submit, the only object the committee had in view was to get a price set upon this improvement that it might be turned over to the free navigation of the country.

Mr. NEGLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question——

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, is a motion to reconsider in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee, has yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to state to the chairman of the committee that I, in common with all other friends of commerce, earnestly desire the removal of all tolls or burdens upon the commerce on the Monongahela or any other water highway. We have differed with the committee only as to the method proposed at the end of the provision relating to the Monongahela River.

Mr. WILLIS. Then it is only as to the method?

Mr. NEGLEY. Not alone as to the method, but as well to the coercive, mandatory, and illegal terms used in the proposition. Also, that these objectionable requirements have not been applied to similar improvements on the Kanawha and the Barren and Green Rivers.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not attempting to offer any criticism on the action of the House. I merely thought the statement I have made was due on the part of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. NEGLEY. Will not the gentleman [Mr. WILLIS] have the courtesy to state why this objectionable feature, which has provoked all this controversy and interfered with the purpose of the friends of cheap navigation from voting for the measure, was omitted in the case of similar propositions?

Mr. WILLIS. It was put in here because it was believed that it was wanted by the people of Pennsylvania. We see now that there is a difference among themselves, and I heard nothing from my friend [Mr. NEGLEY] till yesterday.

Mr. NEGLEY. I was not consulted or advised with, although I had a bill bearing on this subject before the committee, and I had no opportunity of seeing this provision until it was reported to the House and in print. I was denied the right to represent my constituents interested in the intended improvement, and because I favored impartial justice to every citizen have been charged with opposing the measure, which I indignantly deny.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it in order to move a reconsideration of the last vote?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such thing as a reconsideration in the Committee of the Whole. By the last vote an amendment was adopted which may be voted down in the House if the House does not agree to it.

Mr. NEGLEY. I offer the following amendment to the paragraph last read:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 492 strike out $40,000 and insert $140,000, that it will read: Improving the Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: Continuing improvement, $140,000.

Mr. NEGLEY. It will be readily seen by any one who will take the time to examine the provisions of this bill that none of the important water highways in Western Pennsylvania have received any appropriations, although the most liberal provisions have been made for other sections of the country where the commerce is absolutely insignificant compared with that of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers.

I desire to here put upon record the substantial reasons I have for increasing the amount allotted to the Allegheny River, and I hope that every member of the House will appreciate the justness of my proposition.

I also wish to claim the attention of the committee to the importance and the public necessity for this improvement.

The great system of water ways which unite at Pittsburgh, and there, forming one of the greatest avenues of commerce in the entire country, possess a tonnage of immense proportions and more varied in character than pours out of any inland harbor in the world.

Its floating tonnage amounts to quite 2,000,000 tons, numbering four thousand steam vessels and barges. It represents a capital of fully $10,000,000 and employs 4,000 men, and puts in circulation from three to five million dollars annually.

It furnishes the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi five million tons of fuel and manufactured products, receiving in exchange one-third as much of the productions of other regions.

It is the source of 16,000 miles of navigation, and it has saved the National Government millions of dollars in transportation in time of war.

It is the best-adapted site for military defense, the storing and manufacture of heavy ordnance, and the construction of light-draught iron and steel vessels on the continent.

Four thousand cannons of the heaviest caliber used by the Government prior to 1865 were manufactured at Pittsburgh and shipped to the forts on the seaboard.

Steam craft are constructed here for all the navigable rivers in South and Central America. One of the first and most notable iron steamers used by the Government upon the great lakes was also built at this point.

In no other city in the Union is there so large an employment of capital and labor, business enterprise, inventive skill, and mechanical aptitude as can be found in the workshops which front these three great rivers.

Over one hundred and ten thousand employés earn their bread in the four thousand industrial establishments located in Pittsburgh and Allegheny City.

Four-fifths of the total manufacture in the United States, or $25,000,000 in value, of glassware is made here and sold yearly.

There is an annual output of 500,000 tons of pig-iron from its blast furnaces and a product of 400,000 tons of crucible and Bessemer steel. There is a capital of $40,000,000 invested in other branches of trade, which gives employment to eighteen thousand men and women, with an average yearly business of $140,000,000.

The fruits of these great and varied industries find consumers and contribute prosperity and comfort to the inhabitants resident in an expanse of territory continental in its extent and zones of climate.

All honor and praise to the wisdom of the men who have yearly advocated the improvement of our natural highways, thereby creating an irresistible competition, without favoritism, pools, or syndicates, but which rewards enterprise alike and bestows its benefits upon rich and poor without man's dictation.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and the chairman stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 65.

Mr. NEGLEY. I demand tellers.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope my friend will not insist upon tellers.

Mr. NEGLEY. I shall not only do that, but I shall oppose the bill. It is an act of iniquity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 23, noes 73.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the President.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 450, and insert "Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended in said Monongahela River."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the section to which that relates has been passed.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that not only has that section been passed, but that the subsequent section has been read, debated, and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Delaware River, Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Continuing improvement from Trenton to its mouth, $240,000.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 497 as follows:
"Improving Saint Jones River, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $7,000.
"Improving Broad Creek, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $7,000."

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, in the peninsula between Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bays, a considerable portion of which is occupied by the State of Delaware, there are seven rivers and creeks—Appoquinimink Creek, Duck Creek, Saint Jones River, Mispillion Creek, Broadkiln River, Broad Creek, and Indian River. All of these rivers have heretofore been recognized by Congress. Appropriations have been made from time to time for their improvement, and the work on them is in various stages of progress. I have made every effort to get appropriations for their improvement from the committee. I have selected only two of them to be embraced in my amendment in order to test the sense of the House. I suppose it was the modesty of the committee that prevented them from putting these appropriations in the bill.

For Saint Jones River, $20,000 is estimated; for Broad Creek, $20,000 is estimated by the engineer; and I have asked $7,000 for each of those rivers or creeks, which bears about the usual proportion to the estimates on the basis laid down by the committee.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LORE. I hope the gentleman will not occupy my time.

Mr. FINDLAY. I simply wanted to know the proportion the creeks bear to the rivers. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. Out West these creeks would be called rivers. They are not streams of the class that dry up in summer so that it takes a snake to find out their contortions or evolutions, nor of that sort which require a spring freshet to float a 6-inch log. They are rivers on which a large number of sailing vessels and, in some instances, steam-vessels ply day after day.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that this peninsula has but one railroad running down from one extreme to the other, with branches in different directions. That is the sole medium of communication with Philadelphia, New York, and the other large cities for many of the people; but if we can have these rivers improved somewhat by dredging (and it will not cost much), we shall then have a rival method of getting to Philadelphia and other cities. I am sure that this amendment will have the support of my friends from Philadelphia, New York, and New England, when I remind them that this peninsula is the great peach-growing region, for everybody knows that the moment it is mooted abroad that the peaches are killed in Delaware there is a panic in those large cities. [Laughter]. Recent archæological opinions have been advanced that the Delaware peach was the original "apple" with which Eve tempted Adam in the Garden of Eden, and if that is so, I do not wonder that Adam fell. [Laughter.] Saint Jones River connects Dover, capital of the State of Delaware, with the waters of Delaware Bay. Upon that stream a large number of vessels ply to and fro, connecting that portion of Delaware with the Philadelphia markets.

One private citizen has expended a very large portion of his fortune in the improvement of the river. Heretofore there have been two appropriations made for it by Congress. For the Broad River there have been three appropriations, in 1880, 1881, and 1882. The exports of Dover are $1,000,000 annually, the imports between two and three million dollars; and in the Broad River there is about the same amount of traffic. The amount we ask for is a very modest one, and I trust the committee will not hesitate to give it. I desire to add the following facts and data regarding these rivers:

IMPROVEMENT OF DUCK CREEK, DELAWARE.

Nothing has been done here during the past fiscal year.

From page 830, Annual Report of Chief of Engineers, I make the following extract:

"Considerable difficulty is experienced in maintaining the proper depth of water in the cuts which have been made owing to tidal action, which can only be prevented by an extended system of deflective dikes, which would cost more than the extent of the commerce to be benefited would warrant.

Duck Creek is in the collection district of Delaware. Wilmington is the nearest port of entry, and the amount of revenue collected there during the past fiscal year was $21,147.95. The nearest fort is Fort Delaware, and Bombay Hook light is the nearest light-house.

Total appropriation to June 30, 1885	$10,000
Total expenditure to June 30, 1885	10,000

Money statement.

Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project..... $12,000 00

Submitted in compliance with requirements of section 2 of river and harbor acts of 1866 and 1867."

IMPROVEMENT OF SAINT JONES RIVER, DELAWARE.

A project for deepening and straightening the channel, including a straight cut across one bend from the head of navigation at Dover, Del., to the bar at the mouth of the river, was approved, and a contract was entered into with Mr. Thomas Draper, of Dover, Del., on the 24th of December, 1884.

Before this was done two companies incorporated to improve the river under State laws ceded their rights to the United States, and a title to the land through which the cut was made was also made to the United States free of charge.

The work was commenced late, owing to delays in building a new dredge.

Saint Jones River is in the collection district of Delaware, the nearest port of entry being Wilmington, Del., at which the revenue collected during the past fiscal year amounted to $21,147.95. Fort Delaware is the nearest fort, and Mahon's River light is the nearest light-house.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISPILLION CREEK, DELAWARE.

No work has been done on the improvement of this creek during the past fiscal year. The improvement was begun in 1879 under a project to obtain a mean low-water channel of 6 feet in depth and 40 feet in width from Milford, Del., to the bar at the mouth of the creek, which project has not been changed.

This work is in the collection district of Delaware, with Wilmington as its nearest port of entry, at which the revenue collected during the past fiscal year was $21,147.95. The nearest light-house is Mispillion light, and Fort Delaware is the nearest fort.

Total amount appropriated to June 30, 1884	$13,000
Total amount expended to June 30, 1884	13,000

MILFORD, DEL., July 4, 1885.

DEAR SIR: From different sources I learn that the freight in aggregate carried in and out Mispillion Creek and back is from $45,000 to $50,000. This is much smaller than formerly. The railroad carries largely; and, further, the creek needs cleaning out. Work was begun some years ago, but the appropriations were too small for the work contemplated.

About eight or ten vessels, fifty to one hundred tons average—I am told 80 tons; draught, 5 feet 3 inches. A steamboat has lately been put on, and reports a very profitable business in the matter of freights. The present is unusually dull, no vessels being built. Generally four or five on the stocks, some for foreign trade, of tonnage 800 to 1,000.

I would advise you to consult Mr. Ludlow, of Philadelphia, who was formerly in charge of this department. He has surveys and estimates of this river. We think it should be represented to the authorities as a river. The Mispillion has always been regarded as of great importance by Philadelphia. It is one of the best harbors between the breakwater and Philadelphia.

IMPROVEMENT OF BROADKILN RIVER, DELAWARE.

The early history of this improvement is given in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1881, beginning at page 780.

With the approval of the Chief of Engineers examinations were begun about the 20th of November, 1884, and continued to February 7, 1885, to determine at what point, if any, on the southern shore of Delaware Bay the effect of the storms and waves was to cut into the shore in place of adding to it. Such a place was found opposite a point on Lewes Creek, about 1,600 feet above its junction with the Broadkiln River. Should this action be lasting, it will eventually give a new mouth to the Broadkiln River and would naturally be selected as a point for the jetty heretofore recommended for deepening the channel from the Broadkiln River into Delaware Bay.

Upon the representation of some of the prominent citizens of Milton, and with the authority of the Department, an examination of the river from Lewis Creek to Milton was made to ascertain the present condition of the channel and see what filling-in had taken place since the last improvement was made in 1874. The examination showed that at all the places dredged in 1874 the channel is still in good condition, very little filling-in having taken place. A project was then submitted and approved to dredge to give the channel a minimum width of 40 feet and a depth of 6 feet at mean low water, also cutting off some sharp bends which seriously interfere with navigation. This, when carried out, will allow vessels to proceed up or down the river at all stages of the tide and save much loss of time to vessels dropping down from Milton. The proposals for doing the work will be opened July 16, 1885.

The work is in the collection district of Delaware, Wilmington being its nearest port of entry. The amount of revenue collected here was $21,147.95 during the past fiscal year. The nearest fort and light-house are, respectively, Fort Delaware and Delaware Breakwater light.

COMMERCIAL STATISTICS.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication to Mr. Benjamin F. Fooks, dated June 24, we, citizens of Laurel, interested in the improvement of Broad Creek, would respectfully represent: That the appropriation already expended on the creek has been of great advantage to us in widening and deepening the channel of said creek for the greater part of its course, but fails in performing what was intended, in that the appropriation was all expended before the business portion of the town was reached, and left about one-fourth of a mile of the creek with no improvement whatever in the channel. As the appropriation failed to improve the channel to the head of navigation, there was no basin dug for vessels to turn in, and they now, as before, have to stop at Bethel, 3 miles below us, and all our produce and merchandise have to be lightered to and from our town. This leaves us in practically the same condition as before, in that it does not lessen the cost of transportation, although it greatly benefits us in enabling us to move our lighters at any time, while before the improvement we were only able to do so at extreme high water. Had the improvement been continued to completion we believe that by this time our imports and exports by water would have been double what they were when the work commenced, and that ship-building would again have been begun on the same extensive scale as it was carried on a few years ago, but which has ceased entirely on account of the vast trouble and expense of floating the vessels to deep water, and that we would have regained our shipping trade in grain, lumber, wood, &c., which the increased cost of shipping, caused by our poor water communication, has driven from this place to those points which, by more liberal appropriations from Congress, have been made capable of shipping the same at less cost.

From statistics, carefully prepared about the time Congress made our first appropriation, it was found that there were owned and controlled by citizens of Laurel and the country bordering on Broad Creek thirty-three vessels, with a carrying capacity of 5,438 tons. Since that time some few have been lost, but others have been built, and we believe the number and tonnage will remain about the same. At that time there were thirty-one water-mills and twenty-four steam-mills making lumber, for which Laurel would be the most convenient market. The number of steam-mills has been increased, but our disadvantage in water communication has driven the greater portion of the lumber to other markets. The country fed by Broad Creek extends east 20 miles from Bethel, with an average width of 15 miles, making 300 square miles of territory, which was estimated to import each year $500,000 worth of merchandise; $45,000, fertilizers; $5,000, lime and bricks; $2,000, coal, and to export 120,000 bushels grain, 16,000,000 feet lumber, 10,000 cords wood, 200,000 dozen eggs, and 100,000 pounds poultry. In addition to this is our extensive shipment of fruit, which will average 150,000 baskets peaches, apples, and pears, over 200,000 quarts berries, 1,000 barrels potatoes, and 28,000 melons, much of which would be sent by Broad Creek would the water communication permit the running of steamers.

We believe that if Congress would give us $15,000 more it would complete the work and give us the same advantages that are enjoyed by our neighboring towns. We will cite you to the town of Salisbury. Before Congress made an appropriation for deepening Wicomico River her navigation was as poor as ours, but liberal appropriations have made the stream navigable and Salisbury is enabled to offer advantages to shippers that we can not, and has succeeded in drawing largely our trade from us. Believing that our Government does not wish to benefit one section at the expense of another, and believing that the amount necessary to complete the work is small in comparison to the great benefit this section would derive from the improvement, we respectfully but earnestly request you to use your influence in obtaining for us the necessary appropriation required to widen and deepen Broad Creek to the head of the stream.

[Signed by J. L. Long and fifty-nine others.]

WM. F. SMITH, Esq., United States Agent.

IMPROVEMENT OF INDIAN RIVER, DELAWARE.

The original project for the improvement of this river contemplated a cut through the Bulkhead Shoal, and from thence to the inlet to the ocean with the necessary dikes. For this an estimate was made of $50,000 as a sufficient sum. In 1882 an appropriation of $10,000 was made for the river, and to expend it a project was submitted and approved for dredging through the Bulkhead Shoal, and under this a contract was made by which a channel of 80 feet wide and 4 feet deep at mean low water through two-thirds of the shoal and 60 feet wide through the remainder, giving a clear cut of about 3,300 feet.

It was then estimated that $60,000 would be required to complete the work. That estimate was made under the belief that the channel had remained as improved.

In 1884 Mr. C. M. Bird, then engaged in making a survey with a view to forming a continuous inland navigation from Chincoteague Bay, in Virginia, to Delaware Bay, at or near Lewes, Del., had occasion in the line of his examinations to take soundings on the Bulkhead Shoal, and reports as follows:

"I found upon examination in December, 1884, that this channel had filled again at its seaward end, having only a depth of 2 feet at low water, leaving the channel in about the same condition as before the dredging was done.

This work is in the collection district of Delaware. The nearest port of entry is Wilmington, at which the revenue collected during the last fiscal year amounted to $21,147.95. The nearest fort is Fort Delaware, and the nearest lighthouse is Cape Henlopen light.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that we shall go on with this bill as rapidly as possible. We all want to leave this Capitol before the middle of August. There are several special orders immediately ahead for which days have been set apart, and I respectfully request that the friends of this bill will, as far as possible, restrain their exuberant element. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LORE, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Delaware River, Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Continuing improvement from Trenton to its mouth, $240,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Of which $10,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, shall be expended on the said river and its tidal tributaries above Bridesburg.

This amendment does not increase the amount in the bill one penny. It has been agreed upon by the Representatives from that section; and, as I understand, it is satisfactory to the committee which reported this bill, a similar provision having been inserted in previous bills.

Mr. WILLIS. That is true; this provision has heretofore been put in. I see no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Choptank River, Maryland: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I shall not long detain the Committee of the Whole, but, like my friend the chairman of the committee, I desire to say a word or two with reference to the provision of this bill relating to the Monongahela River. The matter has been fully discussed; the situation is pretty well understood. The proposition to recover jurisdiction and control of this property by the United States, in order that we might have free commerce on that river, has been defeated. It was done under a peculiar leadership. The great champion of interstate commerce, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], was one who led to that defeat. The great champion of free raw materials from New York, who gets the benefit of ocean traffic for that harbor and for the cities bordering on the coast, helped to lead in that defeat. I refer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT]. My democratic colleague from the State of Pennsylvania, uncertain in attitude toward the great economic question at this time, as I understand, also participated in leading the hosts of those who brought about that defeat. The great champion of the revision of the tariff, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], whose bill is now agitating the whole country, unsettling business, and disturbing values, participated in leading to that defeat. And last, but not least, the great champion of protection, yclept "Pig-Iron" all over the country, my colleague and associate, the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY], participated in leading to that defeat.

Thus do these leaders and sponsors for the two great parties succeed in sustaining a private corporation and a monopoly at the expense of free commerce in this country. The leadership thus displayed I commend to the country and to the constituencies of these gentlemen. We made here but an honest, earnest struggle for free commerce and free navigation on a river that has a greater tonnage than any other river in the United States; yet these gentlemen from these respective localities supported the private corporation, and in the struggle with free commerce the private corporation and monopoly won.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. In reply to my friend's speech I ask a vote on Choptank.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Susquehanna River, Maryland and Virginia: Continuing improvement, $6,000; to be expended above the Baltimore, Philadelphia and Wilmington Railroad Bridge.

The amendment of the committee to strike out "Virginia" and insert "Pennsylvania" was agreed to.

Mr. SHAW. I move to amend by striking out "Baltimore, Philadelphia and Wilmington" and inserting "Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Great Kanawha River, West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

The amendment of the committee was, to add after the paragraph just read the following:

Improving Elk River, West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Little Kanawha River, West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $22,500. But no toll shall be collected by any person or corporation for this improved navigation. If the right to collect toll is claimed to exist, the person or corporation so claiming shall relinquish the same in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War before any part of this appropriation shall be expended. Two thousand five hundred dollars of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in continuing the improvement of navigation above the west fork.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like a little information in regard to this paragraph. The Committee of the Whole have agreed, as I understand, as to the Monongahela River that a corporation there shall continue to collect tolls. It seems to me this is a similar case, and that the committee should be consistent.

Mr. WILLIS. This paragraph contains a clause providing that—

If the right to collect toll is claimed to exist, the person or corporation so claiming shall relinquish the same in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War before any part of this appropriation shall be expended.

The money which we appropriate can not be expended until this matter is settled.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This appropriation is simply to complete some work that the Government has been carrying on since 1876.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. And will be carrying on for the next hundred years. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. In order to avoid any possible ambiguity, I move to amend by inserting after the word "exist," in line 554, the words "on any part of the river," so that the entire river may be embraced in the provision.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; the gentleman does not mean that. [Laughter.] The gentleman means for the commerce originating above the improvement.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to have the language comprehensive enough so it may pertain to this entire subject.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand that, but the gentleman does not mean until the whole river is made free. He means to put in here the same language as was applied to the Monongahela River.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, substantially.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is as I understand it. Then in addition to your words if you include commerce originating above the improvement, I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PERKINS. I am willing such should be the language of the amendment. It should be on any part of the river above the improvement.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Are tolls collected below the improvement?

Mr. PERKINS. They are. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

On any part of the river above these improvements.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Why limit it to any part above? If the Government improves above them there should be no toll on commerce anywhere.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I understand my colleague accepts the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And the gentleman from West Virginia accepts the amendment of your colleague.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why is it improvements at other places are limited to either $15,000, $20,000, or $25,000, when in this case $100,000 is given?

Mr. WILLIS. The only answer I am able to make is this was peculiar work filled with rocks and bars, and this amount was thought to be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Amendment of the committee to strike out the following:

Improving Monongahela River, West Virginia and Pennsylvania: Continuing improvement, $121,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $125,000; of which sum $15,000 are to be expended above Wilmington.

Mr. BENNETT moved the following amendment:

After the word "Wilmington," in line 566, insert:
"The remainder below and opposite the city of Wilmington, including as much of its northeast branch as lies in front of Wilmington within the city limits."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. I am glad of it, but the gentleman has lost a good speech. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Neuse River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bogue Sound from Beaufort to Swansborough, $10,000.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, for fifty years the importance, nay the necessity, of an inland line of navigation along the coast of the two Carolinas, Georgia, and Florida has been a recognized necessity, not only for commercial but for military and strategic purposes. In casting your eye upon the map you will see a succession of long narrow banks extending over the area named, shutting in to a great extent shallow salt-water lagoons. At present these are unnavigable for purposes of commerce except to crafts of the lightest draught.

Various engineers have reported that by dredging they could be rendered available for heavier tonnage, and thus in course of time a continuous line could be established from the Virginia capes almost all the way down to Cape Sable. Captain Bixby, the engineer in charge, in his last report recommends that a minimum appropriation of $10,000 should be made to improve Bogue Sound from Beaufort to the mouth of White Oak River, and I am convinced that it is a wise suggestion, if for nothing else, to test the feasibility of the idea being carried out on a more extensive scale. The assistant engineer in charge in his report to Captain Bixby states that it is at present the natural outlet for some two hundred thousand dollars' worth of produce, which he thinks could be readily doubled if the facilities for getting out were improved.

The population living contiguous to the stretch of water named are dependent almost entirely upon this mode of egress of their produce, and hence I think that common justice as well as sound policy dictates this small appropriation. As before said, in the event of war it would be of incalculable advantage to the Government in the way of coast defense, and hence, all things considered, I sincerely trust that the proposed amendment may be adopted.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, I prepared an amendment similar to that offered by my colleague, and had intended to offer it at this place. The claim of that section of the country to consideration in the preparation of this bill is a very strong one. Its claims for the improvement of this river are very meritorious, and demand consideration.

In addition to what my colleague [Mr. GREEN] has said, these people down there need an outlet for what they raise. They are cut off entirely from the rest of the world. They are 35 or 40 miles from any market, and have the finest country in North Carolina and the most fertile lands.

That river around Swansborough, White Oak River, runs through a body of the finest timber lands in the United States. Around that section are 40,000 acres of the best oyster land in the world, and with a declining and disappearing supply of oysters this region ought to be cultivated and brought into the market. Every man who loves the delicious bivalve ought to feel bound to aid that section in the development of those lands.

Mr. MCADOO. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina if you shake the oyster trees on that land? [Laughter.]

Mr. SKINNER. Oh, yes! We gather them from September to May; every month that has an "r" in it will do to gather oysters in, and very frequently when we get a little hungry we spell May with an "r" and August with an "r."

But, Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment ought to pass. It is an important point and one which ought not to be overlooked. It has been recommended, as my colleague has said, in several reports of the engineers, and by the last Corps of Engineers, who have submitted a report. This is as meritorious as any other portion of this bill.

The question being taken on Mr. GREEN'S amendment, on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Black River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $3,000: Provided, That all claims of private parties to the navigation of the river shall be ceded to the United States, free of charge, before the commencement of said improvement.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out, in lines 578 and 579, the words "continuing improvement."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, it is very doubtful whether any one can say anything to prevent the passage of this bill. I wish nevertheless to express my objections to the general plan upon which it is proposed to expend these $15,000,000. I have made my motion, sir, to strike out this paragraph because it appropriates a sum of money for the commencement of a new improvement for which no recommendation has been made in the Book of Estimates. It thus forcibly illustrates the dangerous principles upon which the bill is constructed. As no one has yet condemned these faults in its general plan, I venture to call the attention of the House to them at this time.

It needs no argument to prove that if any public good is to result from the improvement of rivers and harbors the direction of the engineers must be followed. They may not be infallible, indeed we know their projects sometimes miscarry. But they are skilled men; they have carefully surveyed these different rivers and harbors; they know far better than any one else what amount of money can be profitably expended upon them, and furthermore their recommendations are not colored by selfish interest. With them neither salary nor tenure of office depends in any manner on the continuation, the success, or failure of these improvements. We must of necessity rely on their judgment and confide in their skill. Any money appropriated under this bill not in accordance with their recommendations to satisfy the clamor of local interests is hazarded on the merest speculation.

Now consider this measure for a moment, comparing the engineers' estimates with the appropriations provided in the bill, and note the policy of the committee. In a few instances the amount appropriated is equal to the amount recommended. In one or two cases more is given than has been asked for. But the general policy has evidently been to allow less than one-third of the engineers' estimate. Even if the discussion had not indirectly called our attention to this fault our everyday experience teaches the wasteful extravagance of such a course. Already several gentlemen have asserted that the appropriations for particular improvements are too small to be of any service; have urged with much reason, that unless the sum fixed by the engineers be given in this or that particular case, the amount which has been appropriated will be actually lost. What reason, I ask, is there to suppose in any improvement already in progress, where the engineers say $10,000 can be profitably expended, that two thousand may not be actually wasted in thus subjecting unfinished work to long continued wear and tear of the elements.

It is true that it would be impossible to follow the estimates of the engineers in all these various improvements; that had it been done by the committee this bill would have reached the enormous proportions of $42,000,000—an expenditure at which every man on this floor would be appalled; which every man here would hasten to condemn; an expenditure which would stagger the tax-payers of this country; and yet we have upon our hands at this moment a plan, and we are committing this Government to a system, year by year in this legislation, which will sooner or later force an appropriation for this very work by the side of which that appropriation of forty-two million would pale into insignificance. And, sir, I say right here that if the revenues of the country would permit it—which, of course, they do not—it would be much wiser, much more economical, to expend that sum at once and end it than to expend five or six times that amount for the same work on identically the same improvements when spread over eight or ten years.

We know that the resources of the Government will not permit such a colossal appropriation; and waiving all consideration of whether they will warrant even as much as this bill carries, I simply call the attention of this House to the evil tendencies, the glaring imperfections, of river and harbor bills framed upon this plan.

Let us analyze this particular measure more closely. I find that it makes appropriations for two hundred and eighty-four different rivers and harbors. Included in that number are sixty-three on which the engineers recommend that the work be completed with the coming fiscal year. A careful reading of the bill discloses that this recommendation has been followed in only five instances.

Now, I admit that if after appropriating the amount necessary to preserve works already begun the revenues would not warrant completing more than five improvements, then the committee has acted wisely. But they have pursued no such course. While provision has been made for completing only five works out of the sixty-three that ought to have been completed, twenty-three new improvements have been incorporated in the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized for the purpose of yielding my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I appreciate his kindness.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying when my time expired, the committee has provided for the commencement of twenty-three new improvements, while they have left unfinished fifty-eight demanding completion. While in most cases only about one-third of the amount necessary to successfully prosecute the work has been allowed, while in many instances enough has not been given to save works from actual destruction, while fifty-eight improvements that ought to have been completed are to drag along subject to the destroying influences of heat, frost, floods, currents, and tides, while this is the case the bill before us makes appropriation to break ground in twenty-three new places.

Not only this, but directly in the same line, illustrating and emphasizing further the faults of the system upon which this bill is constructed, is the provision for ninety-eight new surveys. Judging the effect of this portion of the measure upon next year's bill by the effect of like provisions upon similar legislation in the past, the result will be the incorporation of at least twenty-five new improvements in the bill for next session.

There is but one conclusion to be drawn from these facts, that under this plan improvements begun will continue each year to exceed those finished in the ratio of five new avenues of expenditure to each one completed and closed up.

My time will not allow extended illustrations of the objections to which I have called your attention; but, in passing, a few instances gathered from an examination of the Chief Engineer's report emphasizes sufficiently the vicious wastefulness of this system of piece-work legislation.

In 1866 the work at Plymouth Harbor, Massachusetts, was directed with a view to rendering it more permanent. This work progressed with as good results as the appropriations could yield till in 1884 when the engineers asked for the sum of $19,000 with which to complete the improvement by June, 1885. But Congress, instead, appropriated $10,000 to continue the work. (The next river and harbor bill failed to pass.) And this year, after having spent the $10,000 provided for 1885, in an endeavor to hold their own with the tides and storms which assailed the unfinished works, the engineers are obliged to ask for $20,000 to complete the improvement by June, 1887. But our committee, falling into line with the errors of the past, only appropriate in this bill $6,000 to continue the improvement.

Stonington (Conn.) Harbor of Refuge is another case in point. Our engineers asked for the sum of $50,000 to complete this improvement in 1885. Congress responded by appropriating $10,000 to continue the work. (Next bill failed to pass.) Again this year the engineers urge that they be allowed to complete this harbor, saying:

> It is very desirable that the whole amount required to finish the breakwater be granted.

And we find from their figures that the $10,000 expended in 1885 to continue the work has been absolutely wasted, for they now tell us it will take $53,000 to complete this improvement.

I can only take time for one more sample of this improvident plan of spending the public money.

Wapoo Cut, South Carolina, is a "sheltered inland route for the transportation of the products of a considerable area of country south of Charleston." The engineers seeing the importance of bringing this work to a close, asked for $15,000 with which to complete it in 1885. Congress, with a view to scattering the money in driblets over enough territory to give the bill strength in the House, appropriated only $3,000 to continue the work. (No appropriation for 1886.) After spending this $3,000 in patching up the destruction caused by the elements, the engineers are compelled to ask this Congress for the sum of $15,000 to complete the improvement in 1887. And walking blindfold on in the wake of wicked, thriftless precedent, we are passing a bill now which appropriates $5,000 to continue this work. This, too, unmindful of these words, which accompany the estimates of the engineers, touching this very improvement:

> The delays in providing funds for carrying on the work, and the small amounts appropriated, have rendered it impossible to complete the work at every point. The unfinished cuts are therefore partially filled up from caving banks, during the unavoidable and prolonged suspension of operations. A considerable increase in the total ultimate cost of the improvement is therefore unavoidable.

I venture to say there is not a man on this floor who would stand up and defend a system yielding such results, as wise or economical. There may be those who deem it necessary and expedient, but I think there are none who will contend that it rests on sound business principles. No individual, no corporate interests could stand such management for a day. Is there any very good reason why the public interests should not be managed upon business principles?

And now, gentleman, why is it that year after year Congress has been willing, nay, eager, to spend the money of the Government in this wildly extravagant manner? It is not necessary to go far back in the history of this kind of legislation to get all of the enlightenment we want on this point. The last two days' discussion has disclosed the origin of all the faults in this bill, has made plain the selfish motives which sustain and control this pernicious system. Compare the amount of time which has been devoted to the real merits of any of these improvements, to that spent in complaint of the work of the committee because they have given that State too much and this one not enough, because they have treated that river or harbor too well and neglected this one. Yesterday when the able gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] criticized the plan of improvement at Galveston Harbor, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] sought to meet the criticism by asking how much the district represented by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] got from the bill, intimating that if he were getting a "share in the pork" no complaint would be heard from him. This form of argument in itself reveals the real inwardness of the river and harbor bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. GUENTHER. I move to amend by striking out the last line, and yield my time to my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the gentlemen for their courtesy. I appreciate the indulgence of the House and I would not trench upon the valuable time were it not that I have sat here five months without intruding my views upon any public question, and I therefore feel warranted in proceeding. [Laughter.]

And now, sir, a few words of explanation, as to the purpose of this criticism, the spirit in which it is made, and I am done. I would not be understood as impugning the motives of any man, much less would I cast any reflections on the intentions of the committee or the integrity of the House as a whole.

I would not be understood as saying that this bill is designed as a piece of jobbery. Judged from the standpoint of what is wise and economical, of what is for the national interest, it is a most unfortunate measure. This does not mean that there is any actually fraudulent purpose in the bill. But it does mean this: People all over this country in localities to be benefited by this expenditure of money are clamoring for it. Representatives yield to this clamor, forgetting that this is a national question, and not one of local interest. They besiege the committee just as they are besieged by the people. The committee yields just as the representative yields.

I make this criticism for no cheap partisan purpose. This committee has but followed the precedent of former committees. This Congress is going to do just what former Congresses have done. They are actuated by the same motives and governed by the same reasoning. I believe that there is need of an entire change of system. I believe there is need of reform in the method and principle of expenditure. I believe that the tendency of such legislation is to debauch the country and dull the moral instincts of the American Congress.

Every trade, every profession has a code of ethics peculiar to itself, because every calling in life has its own peculiar relations, its own peculiar responsibilities.

No class of men need such acute ethical discernment as men in public service. There could be no better illustration of the complex and trying character of public duties than is presented by this bill.

For the most part it is not only right but it is incumbent on every man to look after the interests of his constituency. It is easy to carry this habit of thought and action into questions of national importance. It costs a moral struggle to resist the selfish tendency. But I tell you, gentlemen, there is but one right course. Not one dollar of this money belongs to any State, any district, any locality. It all belongs to the United States, and whatever is appropriated with any other view is a misappropriation of public funds. I might use a severer term. No man can shirk the responsibility. He can not place it upon the people of his district. He can not say my constituents want this money, and I will therefore vote for it though I do not approve of the measure. The money is neither his nor theirs. So far as this money is concerned, when by his vote he takes it from the Treasury he becomes, in a liberal use of the word, a trustee of the money and he is bound to expend it for the benefit of national commerce. His responsibility is as different from that of his constituency as is that of the lawyer from the judge.

In the same degree as the Representative is more responsible than his constituents, is the committee more responsible than the House. They shape this legislation, and the reform must begin with them. Just as I hold it to be the duty of every member to resist the importunities of his constituency in regard to any improvement that is not of real national importance, so I hold it to be the duty of this committee to resist the importunities of members of this House concerning any river or harbor of doubtful inter-state importance.

Let the committee report a bill for the improvement of only such rivers and harbors as the interest of national commerce demands. Let them complete improvements already begun before they commence new ones. Let them break away from this plan of making a hundred new surveys each year. Let them adopt a sound business policy, such as any individual or corporation having the same work in charge would adopt. In short, give us a national measure, regardless of the votes necessary to carry it, and invest this subject with the dignity and importance which belong to it. If this House is not loyal and patriotic enough to approve of it the people in general are; and the committee finally adopting this plan will achieve a great triumph. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope we will have a vote now upon the amendment.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, was recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If I can be recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the first question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after "improvement," in line 579 to line 583, and insert:
"That all claims of private parties to the exclusive navigation of said river shall be ceded to the United States upon the payment of $2,000, which amount is hereby appropriated therefor, before the commencement of said improvement."

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GREEN]. The gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to increase the appropriation recommended by the committee, for I know that that is virtually an impossibility, but I do wish to make the small amount recommended by them available for use, and therefore I send up the proviso just read as substitute for the other. Captain Bixby, the engineer in charge of the eastern rivers of our State, recommends in his report that at least $10,000 shall be appropriated for the improvement of Black River. The committee has seen fit to cut down this amount to less than one-third, and to saddle it with a proviso that would render even this small amount entirely nugatory and of no avail. Permit me to explain.

The Legislature of North Carolina, in its session of 1876–'77, granted a charter to certain parties extending through fifty years for the exclusive navigation of this stream in consideration of services to be rendered in cleaning it out and putting it in navigable shape. Whether they have complied with the full requirement of the act or not is not for me to say. At all events they enjoy the prima facie right to hold exclusively, and hence would not be likely to surrender it without an equivalent unless their claim is declared invalid by judicial decision. It is to cover this contingency that the small appropriation recommended to quiet their claim is submitted, so that the other may be utilized.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion there is not a more deserving clause in the bill under consideration. So believing, I last fall took a trip up the river in company with Captain Bixby, the engineer in charge, and his assistant, Mr. Humphreys, in order to judge for myself. We were on a slow craft, moving at about 2 miles an hour, and so had ample opportunity to make a thorough cursory examination, and I am sure that the small amount of money asked for could not be more judiciously expended than for the improvement of this stream. The assistant engineer reports that the commerce going out under the adverse state of the case aggregates $750,000 a year at a transportation cost of over $50,000.

This amount of produce, he holds, could be greatly increased and the rate of freights diminished with increased facilities of navigation. Of this I have not the shadow of a doubt. I will further add that the people of the counties of Sampson and Pender are dependent almost entirely upon Block River for their means of access to market, owing to the absence of railroads in the greater part of these two counties. I therefore most strongly and strenuously urge that the small amount recommended to quiet the claim of parties holding or claiming to hold under State charter may be appropriated, believing that no money could go out of the Treasury that would yield more beneficent results.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire briefly to say that the committee did not feel authorized to make this appropriation without the proviso for the reason that by the statute law of the State of North Carolina the Black River Navigation Company is given the exclusive control of this river. It was represented to the committee this charter was worthless, and in order to test the matter we recommended this appropriation with the desire to improve the river if that were the fact. We have allowed not a large appropriation, but as large as could be given within the limits of the bill, and with a proviso that this matter should be tested before the commencement of the improvement, and that the franchise should be declared void before the Government would undertake to spend any money.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, it was rejected; there being—ayes 35, noes 69.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the language of this proviso:

Provided, That all claims of private parties to the navigation of the river shall be ceded to the United States, free of charge, before the commencement of said improvement.

It seems to me by the use of this language the committee has provided that no improvement shall be made until everybody has surrendered the right to use the river.

Mr. WILLIS. That is rather a broad construction. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. The proviso does not stipulate that the right to collect tolls shall be relinquished, but the right to navigate the river.

Mr WILLIS. I have great confidence in the ability of the other branch of Congress to correct any imperfection there may be in this language, and I believe I will stand by it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Roanoke River, North Carolina: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. O'HARA. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Two thousand five hundred dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary of the aforesaid $10,000, shall be used for the purpose of removing obstructions in the Thoroughfare and Cohoke Creek.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Santee River, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $25,000; no part of which sum to be used for the construction of any road bridge across the Mosquito Creek Canal.

The amendment of the committee was to add to the paragraph the ollowing:

Provided, That if salt water be found flowing into said Mosquito Creek, $5,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for the construction of a flood-gate at upper end of the canal, to prevent the same.

Mr. CANNON. I do not quite understand this amendment, and would like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is a project to connect the waters of Santee River and the Santee system with Winyaw Bay. In order to avoid the necessity of navigating over the bar at the mouth of Santee Creek, it is proposed to turn aside the water of the river into Mosquito Creek, and thence into Winyaw Bay. Certain persons interested in rice lands there came up here and said that this improvement might have the effect of backing up the salt water upon those rice lands. From the best information the committee could obtain we were satisfied this was not true; but for the sake of safety and to avoid any controversy we propose to insert this provision, so that if the Engineer Department discover that in point of fact by reason of the improvement the salt water is conducted upon the rice lands this flood-gate shall be established.

Mr. BEACH. I would like to know whether it is expected to keep the mosquitoes out by making a flood-gate?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That depends upon whether any gentleman from New York emigrates down there during the coming summer. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Congaree River, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $7,500.

The amendment of the committee to strike out the words "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Altamaha River, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $20,000; of which $10,000 are to be used on Doboy Bar, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SPOONER. For the purpose of addressing an inquiry to the committee, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire whether the amount provided for in this appropriation is not 50 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. WILLIS. That is true.

Mr. SPOONER. Then I desire to know why in this case there should be appropriated more than 33⅓ or 35 per cent., which, as the gentleman stated yesterday, was the rule adopted in reference to my own locality.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will examine the report of the engineers he will find that there are two works provided for here—one upon the Doboy Bar, the other upon the river. In this way the gentleman has been misled.

Mr. SPOONER. I might inquire whether the case was not similar in regard to the appropriation for my own locality. But I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Flint River, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

The amendment of the committee was to add to the paragraph the following:

Of which sum $5,000 are to be expended between Albany and Montezuma and $15,000 below Albany.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman of the committee whether the amount provided in this appropriation is not 100 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. WILLIS. That is true and not true. It is true upon one of the reports of the engineers. But I will state that Major Hoxie, who has been recently transferred to that part of the country and with whom doubtless the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] is personally acquainted, sent us a supplementary report, in which he said that he had made a mistake in his previous estimates for this and four or five other rivers which he named; that he intended Congress should give the full amount; that he expected every dollar he asked for should be allowed. He therefore amended his estimates, and upon those amended estimates, a copy of which I have in the committee-room, this appropriation is based. The same remark is true in regard to the five or six other rivers in Major Hoxie's department, the Chattahoochee, the Flint, the Ocmulgee, and the Oconee. If the gentleman desires it, I will send to the committee-room for Major Hoxie's report.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is a proper matter of inquiry, I would ask whether it is applicable to the improvements on the coast now under consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. It is not; but only to this appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I will say in addition that the engineer in charge made an estimate of $75,000 for the improvement of this Chattahoochee River. But Major Hoxie, who succeeded, instead of adopting his estimate, took the amount in the preceding river and harbor appropriation bill, which was $20,000. It has been provided for annually for several years, sometimes $20,000, and sometimes $25,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has said I desire to make an additional statement. The improvement of the Chattahoochee River began in the Forty-third Congress, when the commerce of the river was less than $1,000,000. And yet with the meager annual appropriation, never beyond $30,000 and occasionally as low as $10,000, the trade of that river has been developed from less than $1,000,000 to $7,314,261. I make this statement from the certified report of the Board of Trade of the City of Columbus, which is at the head of navigation on this stream.

I desire to make the additional statement that when the proposition was made in committee to scale the recommendations and estimates of the War Department the engineer of this work was written to, and he replied that $20,000 was indispensably necessary to the preservation of the work as it then stood and to continue the improvement of the river. In addition, he stated the dredging-boat employed in the improvement of the river was lying on the banks of the stream entirely useless from the fact they had no money to put it into operation.

I hope the committee will vote advisedly and not withhold this appropriation. I will state the appropriation made in this bill is the usual amount for this improvement. Major Hoxie having taken recent possession of the improvement, his report has been made from a different standpoint from former engineers, who made estimates with reference to their being scaled and only a certain percentage of their estimates being allowed in the general appropriation bill. Indeed, Major Hoxie predicated his estimate of the demands of this work upon the amount hitherto actually allowed, and not upon the estimates of his predecessor, Major Damrell

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPOONER. If the ordinary and usual appropriation should be made here, why not in the cases of Providence and Narragansett Bay?

Mr. WILLIS. I will state to the gentleman from Rhode Island we acted upon the estimates of the engineers in those cases, which have never been corrected.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. In those cases the gentleman failed to get in a corrected report from the engineers.

Mr. WILLIS. We acted on the latest report, and there was no report in those cases subsequent to the one on which we acted.

Mr. McCOMAS. The inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] makes the question which I wish to ask in my judgment a pertinent one. When we spoke yesterday of the harbor of Baltimore, the chairman replied in that case there was 50 per cent. of the appropriation given, and that to give the amount proposed in the amendment would be to give 100 per cent. Now, in this little river for many years this sum has been given, and the amount given here seems to be 100 per cent. We desire to be informed, for I have great respect for the committee, when in the case of Baltimore and Maryland that city and State had expended $1,000,000 of their own money on that harbor, and the $200,000 with all its great commerce was part of the sum promised at least eight years ago, why yesterday it was given as a sufficient answer that would be 100 per cent. of the present requirement of the engineer? I ask for information, not in any critical spirit, why, unless there can be shown greater public need of the commerce of this river, the committee has allowed 100 per cent. in this case and not in others?

I have heard a statement just now there was an amended estimate. Mr. Chairman, these varying estimates bewilder me. It is urged in behalf of many appropriations there has been such amended estimate, and the one here seems to be in point. Gentlemen say we should pass the item because it is only 33 per cent. of the engineer's report, and again we should pass the estimate because it is a certain other percentage, and, forsooth, the bill is an excellent bill because the people who were charged with giving information upon which we are to vote public money meets it by 66 per cent. Therefore we are told the bill is a good one.

Now, sir, I can not understand this discrimination. It seems to me that if these estimates are in these cases so wide of the mark, if the estimates vary so much, the result must be a bill which is bad, or the engineers, so competent and accurate as we are told they are, make some extraordinary mistakes.

I wander about in absolute bewilderment when I see a great commercial harbor like Baltimore cut down to 50 per cent. of the estimates, while this little river gets the full amount—100 per cent. I lose all the rationale of the proceedings; I am lost, and nothing but my great confidence in the gentlemen on this committee and my knowledge of the difficulties which beset them in the preparation of the bill can console, enlighten, or reconcile these contradictions.

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. McCOMAS, who resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Maryland I will say but a word, for I admit that without some explanation this would seem to be a strange departure on the part of the committee, and I am prepared to give, I think, an explanation that would satisfy all fair-minded men, and I know the gentleman from Maryland belongs to that class. I hold in my hand the estimates given for the improvement of this Chattahoochee River which will serve as an illustration of the point I desire to make, the estimates given at the last session of the last Congress, when, as gentlemen will remember, we passed no bill.

We all know, by inference at least, that the demands of that river are as great if not greater now than they were then. At that time the matter was under the charge of an able and efficient engineer, Major Damrell, who made his report, and the committee last year revised that report, which, instead of asking $30,000, asked for $75,000, as gentlemen will find upon examination, and we scaled it down in proportion with other such items.

Subsequently, it will be remembered, and too late to make a personal survey and examination, Major Hoxie was placed in control of the improvements there.

Gentlemen will find on page 769 of the second volume of the report of the Chief of Engineers of the last session of Congress what the estimates were.

What I intended to say was that Major Hoxie, not being personally familiar with the subject, going on and taking charge just before the reports were sent in, without having a familiar acquaintance with the necessities of the river, made his estimate on the basis of the last bill; whereas I have said the committee has already reduced the estimate required by the engineers very considerably in that bill. Instead of reporting $75,000 for the Chattahoochee River, he took the bill which at the last Congress proposed to appropriate only $30,000, which was the amount as it had been scaled down by the committee.

Subsequently he comes in with a supplemental report, on which the committee base this appropriation, and it is not based upon the report to which the gentleman has referred. I give this river as an illustration of the reason why there seems to be this discrepancy. The gentleman from Maryland is now in possession of all the facts, and I am convinced that they will be satisfactory.

Mr. McCOMAS. Only one more word in response to the gentleman from Kentucky. I would like to know whether it is customary in the long run of the matter for the engineers to take up the estimates of appropriations or the last bill upon which to make their reports, or to make further inquiry upon which the supplemental estimates are based. If they do so, it ought to be inquired into. I would also like to know, further, whether we do not find frequently in the books published as the engineers' reports that the engineers make chronic mistakes, sometimes amounting to 400 per cent.?

Mr. WILLIS. I think not. I think the estimates of the Corps of Engineers are as fair and just as they possibly can be. I believe where they are stationed, and make their examinations, they undertake to say to the House exactly what they can profitably expend during the year, and I am satisfied we could accept their recommendations to the full extent, and if we did so that it would be in the nature of wise economy. But we know from the results of the past that we could not appropriate all the money in the bill that can profitably be expended without endangering its passage by making it seemingly excessively large.

In regard to another question as to whether this case is an exceptional one, I say it only refers to the reports which have been submitted by Major Hoxie. I think after close examination we have found that to be the only instance, the single instance, where a mistake had been made, and the reason for that mistake I have endeavored to point out. The committee, with a view that no injustice should be done to the rivers and harbors of communities whose commerce should have fair access and facilities, reformed the bill in accordance with the last estimate; and I think the gentleman from Maryland himself will approve of that provision of the bill when he is placed in possession of these facts.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, just one word in conclusion, and I have done. The explanation of the distinguished chairman of the committee was not needed to convince me of his eminent fairness, because all the world knows that. It has failed, however, to convince me of the merits and methods of such appropriations.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I will inquire, Mr. Chairman, the exact condition of the question. Was the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, if he made a motion, withdrawn?

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the motion I made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word.

I do not desire to detain the committee but a single moment. It seems to me that a great deal is made of this matter, when in fact there is really but little to complain of. Now, as has been stated by the chairman, Lieutenant Hoxie took charge of this work, as I understand it, when it was perhaps too late for him to make such actual examination of the work as was necessary in order to make an estimate of the amount which could be profitably expended during the next fiscal year; and he simply took the appropriation which had been made the last year as the amount which could be profitably expended, and reported that amount, which, as he says, he thought would be again appropriated.

Therefore if we had scaled that down it would have given a very small appropriation for this river.

On this explanation, which the committee accepted in good faith, a larger percentage, according to his estimates, was allowed in several cases under Lieutenant Hoxie's charge than were generally allowed in other cases by the committee. The estimate, as I have said, was not what it should have been, being based on the appropriations which had been made previously rather than on the amount which could be profitably expended. There is really, I think, very little to find fault with where the matter is properly understood, so far as these appropriations referred to are concerned, and that is all I desire to say.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Flint River, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $20,000.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

Add to the paragraph the following:
"Of which sum $5,000 are to be expended between Albany and Montezuma and $15,000 below Albany."

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of suggesting to the chairman that 100 per cent. of the amount recommended is appropriated here. Is there the same explanation in this case?

Mr. WILLIS. I have a list of five or six or seven improvements, all in charge of Major Hoxie, and all subject to the explanation I have made. The Flint River is one of them. In the last Congress Major Denman, who was in charge, reported $75,000. But this engineer, coming in without time to examine, made an estimate of $20,000. There are five or six other points all under Major Hoxie which are in the same predicament.

Mr. SKINNER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] a question. Is it not a fact that this man Hoxie is a fashionable man of Washington city, and gets these things in his mind while leading the german? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I leave that to the gentleman, who is himself a leader of fashion. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Will the chairman of the committee, if it be quite convenient, state to the committee now the names of the rivers to which this same principle applies? It might save time.

Mr. WILLIS. There are the Chattahoochee River, Georgia and Alabama; the Flint River, Georgia; the Escambia and Conecuh Rivers, Florida and Alabama; the Cahawba River, Alabama; the Tallapoosa River, Alabama; the Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama; the Oconee River, Georgia, and the Ocmulgee River, Georgia. I will send the list over to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Romely Marsh, Georgia: To complete improvements, $14,000.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

Add at the end of the paragraph as follows: "And so much of said sum as may be necessary may be applied by the engineer in charge, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to pay for work done on said improvement, under the direction of the War Department, since the last appropriation was exhausted."

Mr. SPOONER. I do not find Romely Marsh in the list the gentleman has sent me, and yet I find the appropriation there is 100 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. WILLIS. In two or three instances where there was a small amount that would absolutely complete the improvement we have given the whole amount. In this instance we have it stated in the engineer's report that unless the full amount was given, this being sandy soil, it would fill in and cost the Government $5,000 or $6,000 more. Therefore following the report of the engineer, in order to prevent that unnecessary expense, we gave the whole amount.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Escambia-Conecuh River, Florida and Alabama: Continuing improvement, $12,000; no part of which is to be used above Indian Creek.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In line 647 strike out "Escambia-Conecuh" and insert "Conecuh-Escambia."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Pease or Davidson River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In line 655 strike out the words "or Davidson."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Volusia Bar, Florida: To complete improvement, $7,500.

Mr. SPOONER. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why the amount appropriated for improving Volusia Bar, Florida, is 100 per cent. of the amount recommended?

Mr. WILLIS. The only reply is what I gave a while ago. The amount is very small, and the committee thought it as well to get this out of the way.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Black Warrior River from Tuscaloosa to Daniels Creek, Alabama, $75,000, together with the $45,000 on hand; to be expended in accordance with the plan adopted by the board of engineers.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In line 670 strike out "$45,000" and insert "$47,000."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I find that in this item 60 per cent. of the amount recommended is provided to be appropriated. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee if there is any special reason for this large percentage in this case?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I will furnish the explanation desired by the gentleman from Rhode Island. There is a special reason in this case. The work to be done is the construction of locks and dams, and it requires a certain specific amount of money to complete a dam. At the last Congress the sum of $30,000 was appropriated for this improvement; but this was not used, because it was not adequate for the purpose and could not be efficiently used. The committee in this bill proposes to add $75,000 to that amount.

A board of engineers met month before last, under the direction of the Secretary of War, at Tuscaloosa, and examined the locality with reference to the work to be done. I have their report here. It is made by Major Merrill, Major King (who has had charge of the Muscle Shoals improvement), Major Damrell, and Captain Post, names that are known to members of Congress as the names of successful engineers, standing high in their profession. They say, in this report, $245,000 will complete this work, the object of which is to open the navigation of the Black Warrior to the coal fields in its basin and establish water communication between these coal-measures and the Gulf of Mexico through the port of Mobile.

I will state while I have the floor that one of the conditions on which the State of Alabama was admitted into the Union was that all the navigable rivers in that State should belong to the United States. The constitution of the State contains a provision making this concession. These rivers were thus dedicated to the public use. The Congress of the United States accepted that cession, and in the year 1828 Congress passed an act, which is found in section 5244 of the United States Revised Statutes, which reads thus:

The Tennessee, Coosa, Cahawba, and Black Warrior Rivers, within the State of Alabama, shall be forever free from toll for all property belonging to the United States, and for all persons in their service, and for all citizens of the United States, except as to such tolls as may be allowed by act of Congress.

Now those four rivers of the ten rivers of Alabama penetrate the coal regions of the State; and for that reason they seem, by a wise provision on the part of Congress, to have been put under the regulation referred to that no toll should ever be charged upon them. Private enterprise was forbidden to improve them. There was thus imposed upon the General Government an obligation to improve the Black Warrior River. The Government has been tardy in discharging this obligation, but now proposes to do it; and the engineers estimate that with $245,000 the river can be improved above Tuscaloosa to these coal fields, which extend 5,500 miles in the basin of that river.

The coal-measures there are 2,000 feet in depth—500 feet more than any where else in the United States; the supply is inexhaustible, the quality unexcelled; and the Black Warrior seems designed by nature to furnish cheap water transportation to tide water. Within the last ten or twelve years a town has sprung up there as if by magic, which has increased from a population of 4,000 in 1880 to 25,000 at this time. In 1869 11,000 tons of coal was the output in this locality. Last year the output in this Warrior basin had increased to 2,000,000 tons. This coal is loaded on the cars at present for $1 a ton, and is carried to Mobile at the seaboard for a freight charge of $2 a ton. Sir, a few years ago this Government was paying at Mobile $12 a ton for coal transported round from Pittsburgh all the way to Mobile. In 1878 it was paying this price for coal for the revenue-cutters and for other Government uses there. At the present time coal is transported by rail from the Warrior basin to Mobile and is selling in Mobile at $4 a ton—a saving to this Government on account of the consumption by Government vessels and buildings of $14,000 a year. The late collector of customs at the port of Mobile, General Burke, stated that by reason of the reduction of the cost of Alabama coal the United States Government was saved in the cost of coal consumed by United States vessels coaling at Mobile $70,000 in the space of five years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL obtained the floor and said: I yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES], who speaks for the Alabama coal fields.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Chairman, the improvement of this river, which this Government has taken charge of, and which it has declared shall not be improved by private enterprise, opens up navigation to these vast coal fields. When this improvement is completed—and the engineer says it can be completed for $245,000—this very coal of which I speak can be carried by water to Mobile at a charge, according to the opinion of experts, of 28 cents a ton, and it will be sold and delivered at Mobile for $1.75 a ton, thus being cheaper than any other coal on the seaboard of the United States.

We have been told to-day that vast quantities of coal pass over the Monongahela and down the Great Kanawha. Six hundred and fifty thousand tons of coal went down the Great Kanawha in the year 1883-'84; and this Government has expended nearly $2,000,000 in improving the Kanawha River and developing that immense coal business; and it was well expended. Six million tons of coal annually go down the Ohio River; and this Government has expended $5,000,000 in the improvement of that river; and that was well expended and was a good business investment. The engineers only ask for completing this improvement in Alabama $245,000. I believe this House, if fully informed of the situation and of the marvelous development and activity in that Warrior River country, would be willing to vote us the whole amount estimated for this purpose, but we are modest people in Alabama, and we only ask 38½ per cent. of the amount recommended by the engineer, as my friend from Rhode Island has suggested.

With the appropriation we now ask, and the $48,000 appropriated by act of July 5, 1884, we expect to commence this important improvement, and in a few years be able to get out this coal and furnish it not only for the revenue service and other Government purposes at Mobile but to the Gulf squadron coaling at Mobile. Sir, at this time British coal—and that is the only soft or bituminous coal sold in the Gulf of Mexico, for this country does not export a bushel—British coal is selling at St. Thomas and Aspinwall for $12 a ton. I think the Pittsburgh bituminous coal is selling in New Orleans for nearly the same price. When we are able to transport our coal down this river it will be sold in Mobile at $1.75 a ton, and it will then be exported. It will be the only American coal exported from this country. It will undersell British coal in the West Indies and in Central America. It will drive British coal from those markets, tariff or no tariff; and with improved facilities for transit across the isthmus what a future there will be for the coal trade of this country!

But coal is not the only product of this Warrior basin. We have iron also, as my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], who has been there and witnessed it can testify—iron which, being made at a cost of about $9 a ton, is now sent by rail to Savannah, and from there in cargoes to the city of Philadelphia, and it is shipped also to Pittsburgh.

Mr. RANDALL. That is true.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. This coal is carried now at a freight charge of $5 a ton, but with cheap water transportation it can be sent to Philadelphia and Pittsburgh at much less freight; and our friends in Pennsylvania can get all this iron for their purposes more cheaply than they can manufacture it.

Mr. RANDALL. And we do not object to that kind of competition.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. No; that is the kind of competition we want; that is the kind of competition we can stand.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to inquire whether the "Warrior basin" had anything to do with the transformation of the tariff bill in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I am not able to say.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I can not forego the opportunity of urging upon this House the great importance of making liberal appropriations for the purpose of developing the system of water ways within the territory of the State of Alabama. Other friends of this bill will urge its passage as a measure of national importance and will discuss its provisions as a whole. I will only speak of the wonderful capacities for wealth in Alabama, for the development of which we need outlets to the sea.

The State of Alabama to-day is asking you to make her navigable streams of greater benefit to the commerce of the country. Appropriations for that purpose have been made by Congress from year to year, but the great work is progressing in a feeble, ineffectual manner, owing to the inadequacy of those appropriations.

The value and importance of these streams, should they ever be opened up and given to unobstructed commerce, can scarcely be realized. The Congresses which have heretofore considered the subject had no idea of the marvelous mines of minerals and metals whose output should be distributed through the Gulf of Mexico to the shores of two oceans, and they failed to appropriate the means to effectuate this great commercial achievement. The measure of appropriation heretofore for Alabama seems to have been in proportion to the revenue derived directly from the South, if not from that State; a policy which is simply as unwise as it is unjust and too narrow to be indulged in at this day. Such a policy proceeds upon the assumption that one portion of the body-politic may enjoy a state of perfect financial health and vigor, while another portion is in great measure cut off from the commercial circulation of the Union.

In every natural gift Alabama is, I think, the equal of any sister State. If the rich and prosperous North has carried her treasures to the markets of the world and exchanged them for other products, no one who knows the true condition of Alabama's resources will deny that, with equal facilities, the wealth of this Southern sister would rival that of any other State. What we need, and must have, are the means of transportation for the carriage of our minerals and metals to the Gulf. I remember reading some years ago the story of the loss of a vessel freighted with the gold of California. In the midst of the frightful storm, as related by one who escaped the wreck, the yellow dust and coined money were thrown about the vessel like so much rubbish. Those who shared the horrors of the scene had little use for the precious metal when the question of saving life was at issue. Treasures locked up in the bowels of the earth and treasures about to be swallowed up in the maw of the great deep are alike valueless.

What we want to see are the rich products of Alabama floating upon the bosom of her rivers into her port at Mobile. Such a spectacle should quicken the pulse of every American citizen, for it would accelerate beyond measure the pulsations of the great heart of commerce.

The efforts made to open up and develop the great water ways of the North, the deepening of the Northern harbors, and the facilities thus furnished to the enterprising and industrious people of that section have realized remarkable results. The people of the North who enjoy the results of such labors have been enabled to bring about the highest state of development and progress; and at this good hour there is no lack of means of transportation, both by land and by water, for all their productions of field and mine. Energy and capital, enterprise and genius, have conspired, with the favor of this great Government, to make the North a teeming hive of wealth. But the prosperity so far secured has not proven of the most satisfactory character. The effect of it, under the operation of class legislation, has been to make the rich man richer, but has not left the poor man even in his normal condition; for, if we may judge of the true status of things by the numberless strikes and frequent acts of mob violence, and if the anxiety to find new works upon which to expend the Government's money has any meaning whatever, we must conclude that there is some great underlying cause for all these troubles; and for which, as I maintain, there is a safe and certain remedy.

One cause of the trouble is this: By extravagantly developing one section and denying development to another trade is weakened by contracting her limits, and every industry is impaired. I do not hesitate to assert that we can never secure for trade a healthy, vigorous flow until every artery for it is opened and unobstructed from Maine to the Florida Keys.

I have always believed in the doctrine of internal improvement by the General Government in all matters affecting general welfare. My views upon this subject have received a full expression in an able and exhaustive paper prepared by Senator Morgan, and recently read before the river and harbor convention held in Alabama in November last.

In the matter of improving our navigable streams, he maintained that, whenever Congress had declared a stream to be a public highway, and the survey of the public lands had been stopped upon its banks—in such a case the river becomes a part of the public domain, exclusively under the control of the Government, and as free to the citizens of one State as to those of another; that the right to the exclusive enjoyment of such a stream was taken away from the people of any one State, and that no one else could improve such a stream should the Government decline so to do.

Coming now to the Alabama streams, which you are asked to improve, you find that all of them are public highways, which must remain unimproved until this or some succeeding Congress sees proper to open them to the demands of commerce.

Since I have attributed many of the troubles of the country to the abnormal condition of her trade and commerce, so now I am willing to assert that it would only be adding fuel to the flame if by opening up our Southern rivers we did nothing more than spend the people's money in that section of the Union. No spendthrift was ever improved, morally or physically by wasting his patrimony, and no government ever grew in vigor and importance by taxing one man to provide means to support another. The public money must be spent for the well-being of the whole country or we betray our trust, and, as trustees, waste the beneficiaries' estate.

Why is it that Alabama so earnestly appeals to you to open her rivers; why was it that so many of the brightest intellects, so many of her most enterprising and intelligent citizens, met in convention last autumn and formulated her language of entreaty?

Take the map of Alabama in your hands and look at it from a commercial standpoint and tell me, what do you see? By neglect of her water ways, and by means of railroad systems now in the hands of a few capitalists, Alabama, like many another Southern and Western State, is being bled to death by means of those arteries of steel. The productions of our State are enriching, in some measure, nearly every other State except Alabama. Our lands are being impoverished by being denied a change of crops, and by means of guano and other like fertilizers which exhaust the soil under the operation of "intensive farming," as it is termed, and by the system of railway monopoly, now so firmly fixed upon us, the productions of our State are taken away to Northern markets at an incredible expense to the producer, and the too-celebrated aphorism of the manager of the Central Pacific Railroad, "of charging all the traffic will bear," is carried out in Alabama to the very letter.

The whole current of trade is reversed, is forced to flow upstream; and the grievous spectacle is now to be seen of the South paying tribute out of her own productions to enrich a class already so highly favored by the Government (the railroad magnates) because of transportation. Only think of it; upon every bale of cotton carried by rail to New York city we are paying, over and above what it should cost our people, the sum of two dollars and a half, taken from him who earned it in the sweat of his face under the blistering rays of a Southern sun, and taken, too, without any pretense of compensating advantages ever to be realized.

See the effect of all this. We are impoverished, and none but the wealthy, favored few are benefited. The evil result is upon us; there is financial gloom throughout the agricultural sections of the South; and it is only a question of time when the present owners will be stripped of their lands by their mortgagees and other creditors, the same financial tragedy re-enacted, and the families of their successors left destitute.

I submit, sir, that the calamity of the South is a progressive calamity, and that we are in the frightful condition of him in the story who saw, day by day, one window after another disappear from his prison cell, which was contracting hourly to crush him. The South, unaided, is powerless to put an end to her calamity. She has no money; no, not even the hated and despised silver; she is in the grasp of a power as selfish and inexorable as death. But this Congress has the power, and the way is open to deliver her, and as the Representatives of this great people it is our duty to do it. Open the water ways of Alabama if you would relieve the depression and the great financial distress of her people. It is the duty of the Government, as I have shown, to do this, so that upon the bosom of her streams we may float down those public highways to the sea her then immense yield from forest, field, and mine.

Remember that railroad syndicates may and do defy competition. But the right of way upon the bosom of a stream is as free to him who floats his raft of logs upon it as to him who owns a craft of a thousand tons.

Remember, also, that railroads can never compete with water courses in the carrying of heavy freights, whether they be of minerals or of ores—in fact, with no freights of any kind or description except it be those things requiring instant delivery at market.

It is asserted by competent authorities as a fact that the drawing capacity of one tugboat is equal to that of twenty locomotives drawing each forty freighted cars, or the equivalent of eight hundred freight cars. Bear this in mind, and you will readily perceive how much cost and labor will be saved and how much more of every kind of yield and production will be carried to market. It is this wonderful hauling capacity, this power to haul her productions of field and mine, however prodigious they may be, which will enable Alabama to restore her fortunes and to rival the most favored regions of earth in riches and prosperity.

In addition to what I have said, there is another and controlling reason which should influence this House to grant the aid demanded for opening the Alabama rivers. It is this: That the office or function those rivers would perform is in every way exceptional. Take the Coosa or Warrior River for illustration, and you will find that by developing either one of those rivers you open to market beds of the richest bituminous coal in inexhaustible quantity. Nor is this all. You would furnish easy and cheap transportation for valuable lumber and for agricultural products from localities which are now shut out from market.

The most serious objection seemingly to making ample appropriations for opening those rivers is this: That the present demand is so small in comparison to the amount of money needed for such purpose.

Those who urge this objection forget a momentous circumstance in the history of the South. Formerly the cotton-compress cost thousands of dollars to erect; now the same, it is reliably stated, may be put up for a few hundreds; and our Southern cities see and feel that they must become manufacturing centers or their doom is sealed. In view of this, and to keep abreast with that wonderful progress which so greatly distinguishes this era, those who have the interest of the South at heart, and who have reflected well over the matter, can see but one thing to hope for her. We must revolutionize everything of a business nature down South. We must in large measure manufacture our cotton. We must manufacture our iron and steel, and not be content as at present to furnish the raw materials to mills more than a thousand miles away. We must do something for ourselves, and not labor, as we have been doing, solely to enrich others.

But, sir, under the construction of the law relating to navigable streams, even if we were able, we are not now permitted to help ourselves. The Federal Government must do the work, not to benefit Alabama alone, but the whole Union, so that we may invite successfully the hundreds of thousands of industrious, enterprising people who stand ready to aid in developing and in sharing with the people of Alabama the untold wealth waiting to be created when the means of transportation are supplied.

Mr. Speaker, the highest ambition of my life has ever been to do something which would benefit the people of Alabama. Upon the soil of that State I was born, and there I have grown to manhood and from manhood to maturity. Her people are my people, and her interests are dearer to me than life itself. I know of no means by which I could benefit my people more efficacious than to place within their reach the power to help themselves. This power they will have when the restraints upon the transportation of their commodities are removed, when they are relieved from the tyranny of transportation monopoly; and for these reasons my vote must be cast in favor of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, I have been not only interested but greatly pleased with the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JONES] who last occupied the floor. I am delighted to learn of the prosperity of any part of this great country of ours; and I am glad to assist in facilitating, so far as I can, the opening up of transportation facilities for the products of our mines and manufactories in all parts of this land. The object of my inquiry has been not to arouse any antagonism toward Alabama or any of our sister States. I have simply followed out the line of my remarks heretofore made concerning the manner in which, it seems to me, this bill has been framed and the improper and unjust discrimination which has been made in applying the appropriations as they have been. All along the coast to which the appropriations now under consideration apply I find an entirely different rule acted upon from that which was adopted with regard to our North Atlantic coast. It is this to which I object. It is the sectionalism pervading this bill against which I protest. I do not object to the development of great water ways in any part of the country; but I do say that equal claims in other portions of the United States are entitled to equally fair consideration. I do not complain, as I before said, of an economy which bears in a justly proportionate manner upon the various districts and States of the Union; but I do object to 100 per cent., 75 per cent., 60 per cent., 50 per cent. of the amounts recommended by the engineers being given to certain sections, while deserving works—I will content myself by simply designating them equally deserving works—in my own State are left unprovided for in the action which the committee has taken in framing this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tombigbee River, Alabama and Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $25,000; to be expended below Vienna, $15,000, and between Vienna and Fulton, $10,000.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I move to amend, in line 685, by striking out "twenty-five thousand" and inserting "forty thousand dollars;" and in line 687, by striking out "ten thousand" and inserting "twenty thousand dollars." Add to the paragraph the following words:

And $5,000 to be expended in the improvement of the river from Fulton to Walker's Bridge.

Mr. WILLIS. Pending that amendment, I desire to say, wishing to consult the pleasure of the committee, and after talking with a number of our friends on the floor, it has been suggested we rise now and take a recess until half past 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. I make the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask by unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary in behalf of Mr. Parker, who is necessarily absent, a bill (H. R. 2124) amendatory of and supplementary to "An act to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1824, and providing an additional place for holding the several courts thereof.

The SPEAKER. Does it require an appropriation?

Mr. BENNETT. I understand not.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to retard it all I can.

Mr. BENNETT. It changes a couple of counties in Pennsylvania from one judicial district to another.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it provides for attaching certain counties to another judicial district and the holding of another term of court, but requires the present marshal and clerk shall perform the duties.

There was no objection; and the bill and amendment were referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREE PARLIAMENT FOR IRELAND.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask, by unanimous consent, to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States earnestly sympathizes with the right honorable William E. Gladstone and his associates in their efforts to secure a free parliament for the people of Ireland, and congratulates the people of that hitherto unhappy country upon the prospect of an early and successful termination of their long and patriotic struggle for the right of local self-government.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House is directed to communicate a copy of this resolution to Mr. Gladstone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time?

Mr. SWOPE. I object.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I hope no one will object to this resolution.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 274) for the relief of John A. Morris;
A bill (H. R. 5539) for the relief of James G. Martin;
A bill (H. R. 5549) limiting the cost of the erection of a public building at Rochester, N. Y.; and
A bill (H. R. 7467) to grant for the use of the public a street across the United States grounds in the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee.

RECESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] withdraws his objection to my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is insisted upon, and that cuts off all unanimous consent.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask for a division on the motion to adjourn

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 75.

Mr. HIESTAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SWOPE. I withdraw my objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn objection to my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion to adjourn cuts off all unanimous consent.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. COMPTON. To-morrow being Good Friday, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet Saturday morning at half past 10 o'clock.

The motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at half past 10.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 28.

Mr. HEPBURN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Make it 11 o'clock instead of half past 10.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced it had agreed to the request for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Indian appropriation bill, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB and Mr. CALL.

RECESS.

Mr. WILLIS. At the suggestion of gentlemen who differ with me I modify the motion by consenting to make it 11 o'clock.

Mr. HISCOCK. That is, with the understanding at 12 o'clock the House shall adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), the House took a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House, at 11 o'clock a. m. Friday, April 23, 1886, resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. WELLBORN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole

House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

It is proposed to amend in line 685——

Mr. WILLIS. To save time, Mr. Chairman, I will state that my friend from Mississippi agrees to withdraw the amendment pending last evening, with the understanding that it shall be offered at another part of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Big Sunflower River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $5,000; of which $2,000 to be expended between Woodburn and Lehartan.

Mr. CATCHINGS. With the consent of the committee I desire to move an amendment in line 691 to correct the spelling of the name. This should be "Lehrton" instead of "Lehartan."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Yazoo River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $15,000; of which $5,000 to be used in repairing snag-boat.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to amend in line 719, adding the words, after the word "dollars," "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The engineers report that it will not take so much.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bayou Bartholomew, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. McRAE. I move, Mr. Chairman, in line 727, to amend by adding after the word "Louisiana" the words "and Arkansas."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bayou Courtableau, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $5,000.
Improvement Bayou D'Arbonne, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $2,000.
Improving Bayou Terre Bonne, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $5,000.
Improving Cypress Bayou and the lakes between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La., Texas and Louisiana: To complete improvement, $18,000.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information as to the character of the work on these bayous from the chairman of the committee, as well as the volume of commerce upon them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. To which do you specially refer?

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I can answer.

Cypress Bayou in Texas and the lakes between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La., form a navigable water way about 150 miles long. Jefferson, Tex., is an important town in Eastern Texas, in the Congressional district represented by my friend from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. There is a very considerable commerce in cotton every season coming from Jefferson down Cypress Bayou and into the lakes through Red River on to New Orleans.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the character of the improvement?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is the removal of stumps, logs, snags, and other obstructions.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. There are no rapids to be improved?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No, sir; but some dredging to be done.

Mr. HEPBURN. Can the gentleman tell us how much cotton is floated through this bayou to which he refers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am unable to state from memory, but the report of the engineers shows it. Jefferson is the shipping point of about ten or fifteen thousand bales, and there are other shipping points on the lakes.

Mr. HEPBURN. On this Cypress Bayou?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Jefferson, Tex., is the head of navigation on this bayou, which flows into the lakes, and the lakes discharge into the Red River.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tensas River and Bayou Macon, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $4,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in line 739 for the purpose of making an inquiry.

I desire to ask the chairman if he knows how many snag-boats are used in improving the navigation of the Mississippi and these several bayous—snag and dredge boats?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not recollect the exact number. I will say to the gentleman, however, that this improvement, to which the paragraph just read relates, is not immediately connected with the Mississippi. There are only one or two snag-boats here, which are used on three or four different rivers. Three, I think, is the total number employed on three or four rivers in this immediate vicinity.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. So far as this is immediately connected with the Mississippi River that is true; but it has reference to its improvement, because all of these bayous are connected with that system of navigation, all of them opening into the river. The bayous may be called, and are, to a certain extent, navigable rivers, being the only highways to the Mississippi from these regions.

But I desire to have this information for a purpose, to be used later on, and for that reason I asked the question.

Mr. WILLIS. I will give the gentleman the information later on, but it is not immediately at hand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the gentleman will permit me a moment. The Tensas River and Bayou Macon are navigable tributaries of the Ouachita River. That river has a navigable length of about 400 miles and floats a large commerce. Upon it snag-boats are operated, and from the parent river they ascend the bayous and are used in their improvement. Thus, by making an appropriation for the improvement of these navigable tributaries the snag-boats can be utilized upon them and be of service in clearing out obstructions in their channels.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I had no motive in asking the question to make opposition, but to obtain information to be used later on.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Red River, Louisiana and Arkansas: Continuing improvement from Fulton, Ark., to the Atchafalaya River, Louisiana, including completing the work at Alexandria, $95,000; of which sum $45,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in making a thorough survey of the river from Fulton, Ark., to the Atchafalaya River, and in completing the survey of Bayou Pierre, Louisiana.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would be obliged for information as to the character of this work to be completed; and also while $95,000 is to be appropriated for this work, a portion of it, $45,000, is to be used in making a thorough survey of the river from Fulton, Ark., the remainder including the completing of the work at Alexandria. What is that work?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will answer the gentleman from Kansas. Alexandria is an important town on the Red River, and just above the town are the falls of the Red River. The Government has been improving these falls of the river for years; and in connection with this improvement certain work has been done in the river at the upper end of the town of Alexandria. This work was ordered in the river and harbor bill of 1884, has been partially done, and its completion is provided for in this appropriation for the Red River.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What will be the aggregate cost?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The engineers in their report require $10,000 to complete the work there.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is this survey of the upper part of the river a different work from the other surveys which are mentioned?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Chief of Engineers for years has been asking Congress to make an appropriation for the survey of the Red River. The Red River of the South is the third river in the United States in point of navigable length. Steamboats have traversed it from its mouth 1,200 miles up. This survey is to be from Fulton, Ark., to the mouth of the river, a distance of 700 miles. It has never been surveyed. The $45,000 mentioned in the bill is the estimate of the Chief of Engineers for its survey. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars every year in continuing the surveys on the Mississippi, the Missouri, and the Ohio Rivers. The Red River, which is a longer river than the Ohio in navigable length, and the valley of which has a commerce of twenty-five millions per annum, has not hitherto been surveyed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee why it is in this particular case the entire amount asked for is granted by the committee—100 per cent. of the recommendation?

Mr. WILLIS. In reply to the gentleman from Iowa, I will state that this has not been done. If the gentleman will examine the Book of Estimates which I hold before me he will find the estimate for the survey was $45,000 and for the improvement $90,000. We combine the two.

Mr. HEPBURN. It was the survey I was speaking of. It is recommended that $45,000 shall be used in making a thorough survey of the river, and that amount is appropriated.

Mr. WILLIS. So far as the survey is concerned, the gentleman is correct. I thought he alluded to the aggregate of both appropriations. The reason why the full amount for the survey is recommended is that the committee, in its judgment, thought if any survey was made it could be less expensively made by being completed at once; and that was the request of the engineer.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Tickfaw River, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $2,000; to be expended on its navigable tributaries.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I should like to be informed into what river this river and its tributaries enter. My geography is not equal to an acquaintance with all these streams.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Tickfaw River is a river which empties into Lake Pontchartrain, which is a body of salt water contiguous to the city of New Orleans, touching the rear of that city, and navigated by vessels of all kinds. The vessels which navigate the Tickfaw reach New Orleans over Lake Pontchartrain.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It strikes me this paragraph is rather blind. It makes an appropriation for tributaries of the Tickfaw. What are its tributaries? There is an appropriation for tributaries, but they are not named.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Tickfaw River in past river and harbor bills has been included among the rivers for which appropriations have been made. The engineer now states the Tickfaw River does not itself need a further appropriation, but certain tributaries named in the report should have a small appropriation for clearing out snags and other obstructions.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman name those tributaries?

Mr. WILLIS. They are the Blood, the Natalbany, and the Ponchatoula. For the purpose of saving the ears of the committee we put these in the bill as tributaries of the Tickfaw.

The engineer says:

It is therefore recommended that no further appropriation be made for the Tickfaw unless the money so appropriated can be applied to the branches referred to.

We have recommended this appropriation in accordance with the report of the engineer.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. These are navigable branches of the river?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Have there been surveys made for this work?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir; they are stated here in the engineer's report.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Ouachita and Black Rivers, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, including bank protection at harbor of Monroe, $17,500; of which $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for repairing snag-boat Wagner.

The committee recommended the following amendment:

In lines 756 and 757 strike out these words, "including bank protection at harbor of Monroe."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is merely a verbal correction.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Improving Ouachita and Black Rivers, Louisiana," in line 755, and insert "Improving Ouachita River, Louisiana and Arkansas, and Black River, Louisiana."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask wherein it differs from the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It differs only in this respect. The Ouachita River is an interstate river, and we do not wish to confine the improvement to the portion of the river in Louisiana. The river is navigable 150 miles beyond the Louisiana State border.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Calcasieu River and Pass, Louisiana: Continuing improvement to secure a navigable channel 8 feet deep over the bars at the Calcasieu Pass; for this purpose the money on hand heretofore appropriated for improvement of Calcasieu River is to be used.

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors recommended an amendment striking out, in line 762, the words "at the Calcasieu Pass" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "affecting the entrance to said river and pass, and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Saint Francis River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $8,000.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, the report of the engineer, upon which this appropriation is based, recommends improving the river up as far as the town of Saint Francis. That is the object of the provision in the bill; but in order to make it clearer I move to amend by inserting in line 770, after the word "Arkansas," the words "and Missouri to the town of Saint Francis."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment, or rather to propound an inquiry for the purpose of obtaining some information. I must confess that I am not as competent to discuss this clause or many other clauses in the bill as perhaps I should be. I have not read the report of the engineers touching the Saint Francis River. Some years ago, however, it was my fortune to pass through that section of country in Arkansas, and while my recollection is that the White River is a magnificent river, from anything I could see or learn about the Saint Francis River in Arkansas (to say nothing of the portion in Missouri) my impression is that it is not of much account. I must say, therefore, that I am surprised to see this item in the bill, and unless the committee have evidence of some recent revolution which has affected the bed of that river, whatever may be the judgment of the committee, I must confess that to my mind this is not a meritorious appropriation.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman please state what part of the Saint Francis River he is familiar with?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is undoubtedly in error—honestly so, I have no question. I will read some figures from the official report of the engineers, which will show at once that this is one of the most important rivers in the United States.

Mr. CANNON. If so, I shall be very glad to be informed and to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Twenty-eight thousand bales of cotton and 15,100 tons of cotton-seed have been transported upon that river annually, and that alone, to say nothing of other commerce, would seem to justify the appropriation the committee has recommended, which the gentleman sees is a small one.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will say further to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that I know this river well, and it has, speaking roughly, about 250 miles of navigable water. There is a commerce carried upon it and regulated by it of several million dollars annually. In fact, it is one of the most important medium-sized rivers in the Southwestern system.

Mr. CANNON. I am very much gratified to hear it. I must say, I had got a contrary impression.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let me add that I personally have gone up the Saint Francis River by boat about 150 miles from its mouth.

Mr. CANNON. A gentleman near me suggests that the river is growing, and I am gratified to be informed of that fact. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Arkansas River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $75,000; of which there are to be expended $8,000 at Pine Bluff, $13,000 at Fort Smith, and $10,000 at Dardanelles, or so much thereof under those sums respectively as may be necessary at those points.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, in order to define more clearly the purpose of the committee, I move to amend that paragraph by inserting after the word "improvement," in line 773, the words "according to plans and recommendations in Appendix V 13, Executive Document 1, Forty-ninth Congress, first session."

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be glad to learn why it is necessary to indicate these particular points where this money is to be expended. Why can not the engineers in charge be trusted to determine these questions? Is not this appropriation for the purpose of improving wharves at these different places named, and fixing up the river banks for the convenience of the people of these various towns?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will answer the gentleman's question. What is specified for localities is not embraced in the amendment. That which is specified for Dardanelle has nothing to do with any wharf, but is to correct the channel of the river, which is now abandoning the port at that point. That which is specified for Fort Smith relates to repairing a dike which was constructed by the Government a good many years ago to keep the river over on the city side, that dike being now in need of repair. The specification in the amendment which I have introduced is simply to make perfectly clear what is recommended by the engineer, so as to show that we are not appropriating for any general and distributive purposes, but for the specific object enumerated in the report. That object has relation exclusively to the general channel improvement over a particular section of the river, 176 miles in length, where the great body of the commerce must pass. The effect of the amendment is to prevent the carrying out of any such purpose as the gentleman is disposed to attribute to it.

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move further to amend by striking out "s" at the end of the word "Dardanelles," so as to correct the spelling.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the removal of snags, wrecks, and other obstructions in the Arkansas River, $26,500; of which sum $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to complete the survey of the Arkansas River between Fort Gibson and Wichata.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to ask where "Wichata" is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We would be very glad to have the gentleman give us some information about Wichata. He and his constituents have been getting appropriations for it for a long time. It is said to be in his State.

Mr. PETERS. If it were spelled correctly, I should recognize it as being in Kansas.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask to have a verbal amendment made so that the name may read "Wichita."

Mr. PETERS. In addition to the correction of the spelling, I ask that the word "Kansas" be inserted after "Wichita" so as to designate it.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope that will be done. I modify my amendment accordingly.

The amendment of Mr. WILLIS, to strike out "Wichata" and insert "Wichita, Kans.," was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Red River, Arkansas, above Fulton: Continuing improvement, $7,000.

The amendment of the committee to strike out the words "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to offer a verbal amendment, with the concurrence of the chairman of the committee. It is to insert after "Arkansas," in line 785, the words "Texas and the Indian Territory," and to insert after the word "Fulton" the word "Arkansas;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Improving Red River, Arkansas, Texas, and the Indian Territory above Fulton, Ark., $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Improving Little Red River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

The amendment of the committee to strike out "continuing improvement" was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Petit Jean River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $3,500.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out the words "continuing improvement."

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether in these cases where the words "continuing improvement" are stricken out by the committee the appropriations are for new works?

Mr. WILLIS. They are; and it is for that reason we strike out the words "continuing improvement."

Mr. HEPBURN. In the case of all these amendments that is true?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Are there any of these cases in which the improvements have been made heretofore, but the appropriation is for further improvement?

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir; these are matters recommended by the engineers upon later surveys, works which have not heretofore received appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving White River, Arkansas: Continuing improvement, $18,000; to be used in completing the survey and improvement of the river.

Mr. PEEL. I desire to offer an amendment which is acceptable to the committee, as it simply directs the method in which this appropriation is to be divided.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 793, and insert "$13,000 of which, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to complete the survey of said river; the remainder for general improvement."

Mr. WILLIS. That is exactly in accord with the recommendation of the engineer. The committee has no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill until the following paragraph was read:

Improving French Broad River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of moving an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman, after having indicated the amendment which he wishes to submit to this paragraph, will allow it to go over for the present, so we may, in the time remaining before 12 o'clock, go over those parts of the bill which will give rise to no debate. The understanding is that we shall not take up any matter which any one member will object to.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. With the understanding that I shall have full opportunity to offer the amendment hereafter, I will withhold it for the present.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that amendments which are indicated by gentlemen may be offered hereafter for action, and that in the mean time we may go over those parts of the bill which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I should like to know when we reach the Michigan and Minnesota parts of this bill whether it is intended by this arrangement to close debate upon those paragraphs.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no such intention. I do not propose to take up those matters until we get on the bill again. My proposition now is to take up only those parts of the bill which will give rise to no debate and to which there is no objection. When we get to the Mississippi River, if a single member wishes it passed over, it will be passed over.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. And the Missouri River?

Mr. WILLIS. It is not the purpose either to take up the Missouri River. Those portions of the bill which may give rise to debate, and to which there may be objections, are to be passed over for the present, and only those portions are to be taken up and acted upon which will give rise to no debate, and to which there is no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But gentlemen may wish to offer amendments.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no intention to deprive any member of his right to offer an amendment. All that is asked is that the member on reaching the paragraph shall indicate his amendment, and then at the proper time we will come back and consider it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It is then included in the unanimous consent that any gentleman may return to offer amendments?

Mr. WILLIS. Embraced in this morning's action—yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I do not object to that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As I understand it, any gentleman desiring to offer an amendment, all he has to do is to indicate it, and the committee will return to it in order hereafter for consideration and action.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request so it may be clearly understood. The gentleman from Kentucky asks by unanimous consent to go over that part of the bill on to the close to which there may be no objection and which will give rise to no debate. Any gentleman, by simply indicating his desire to submit an amendment, may be permitted to return to that particular part in proper order, although for the present it has been passed over.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to know what reason there is for this new proceeding.

Mr. WILLIS. It is in order to save the time of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. How does it save the time of the House?

Mr. WILLIS. There is very little more time remaining between now and 12 o'clock, when, by agreement made yesterday, an adjournment is to take place. And by the arrangement I propose we may be able to get through with all that portion of the bill to which there is no objection and which will give rise to no debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let us have some understanding as to the time when a member may indicate that he may desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. When we come to that part of the bill all he has to do is to rise and say that he wishes to offer an amendment at the proper time to that part of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. When we come to the portion of the bill to which the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment if he will rise at that point and say I have an amendment to offer the Clerk will make a memorandum and so will I, so that it may be taken up in order when we return to the portions which have been passed over for future action.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But suppose some gentlemen who are now absent may desire to offer amendments?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Those members who are not here now of course could not offer amendments, and they will not lose anything by this arrangement.

Mr. WILLIS. Those who are now absent would have no chance to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the unanimous consent asked by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIS. It will not take advantage of anybody.

Mr. LONG. Why not settle the whole matter at this time?

Mr. WILLIS. The object is to save the time of the House.

Mr. LONG. No time will be saved; but, on the contrary, time will be lost.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is perfectly evident that no time will be saved by the arrangement, and I object to it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving French Broad River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $6,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I offer to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after words "six thousand dollars," in line 810, the words "and continuing improvement on same river in North Carolina, $16,000, of which eight thousand are to be expended at and above Big Buck Shoals."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment to continue the improvement of the French Broad River in North Carolina. The Government has already expended $43,000 there, and I do not see any good reason why that improvement should be abandoned.

I was informed by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that that committee had determined to leave out all rivers not connected with navigable streams. And yet I find they have excluded not only this river but several others of a similar character. In the engineers' report it is estimated the whole cost of the work would be $122,000. They have expended $43,000, and $79,000 is still required. My amendment only provides for $16,000; and I can not see why the French Broad River, which has heretofore received appropriations from the Government, shall be turned aside while other rivers are granted appropriations in this bill which, in my judgment, are not of equal merit. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIS. The only reason that actuated the committee in its recommendation was that we stood face to face with a decision of the Supreme Court which said that this was not a navigable river; and we have too much respect for the court, notwithstanding our desire to improve this beautiful river, to attempt to improve it while this decision stood.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. If the gentleman will show me that decision I will give up this amendment. On the contrary, I will show that the decision he refers to relates to a river which is included in this bill. It is a decision in 11 Wallace in regard to a ship called the Montello. The court decided that that river was not navigable.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to state the case to which I suppose the gentleman from North Carolina refers. The case of the Montello is in 20 Wallace, page 430. The decision in that case referred to the Fox River, Wisconsin, and not to the French Broad River. The French Broad was included in the report of the Secretary of War, that under the decision of 11 Wallace the French Broad was not a navigable water way of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. If the French Broad River is not a navigable water way why do the committee report an appropriation to improve it in Tennessee and not in North Carolina?

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 42, noes 60.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] referred, as I understood him, to a decision in 20 Wallace. The Montello decision is in 11 Wallace, page 414. The river there referred to is the Fox River; and in this bill is included the Fox River to which the committee give an appropriation. Why should the French Broad River be excluded when there is nothing to show that this river is not navigable?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I make the point of order that there is nothing before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. A formal amendment is pending.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I am not surprised at the point of order being made by the gentleman from West Virginia, who has got two or three rivers in his country exactly like mine and for which appropriations are made. One of his rivers is the Buckhannon, which is used for no other purpose than to raft lumber down. There is the New River, belonging to the same class, and several other rivers exactly like the French Broad River, except that on the French Broad there are many products which can not be hauled out and it can be made a navigable river, while the Buckhannon can not be made serviceable except for the purpose of rafting logs.

Mr. SKINNER. I move to strike out lines 809 and 810. I do so because I think that an invidious distinction has been made between North Carolina and Tennessee. This is exactly the same river that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and this Committee of the Whole refused to appropriate for in North Carolina. I want this appropriation stricken out, unless the Committee on Rivers and Harbors can give a good reason for that invidious distinction.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire simply to say in all kindness to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] that French Broad River is divided by a fall, which is not navigable, and in a decision of the Supreme Court, to which the Secretary of War calls attention in Executive Document 142, no river is improvable by the United States that is cut off by a fall. The lower part of the river is navigable up to the fall. That is the whole of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. Is no part of the river above the falls an interstate river?

Mr. WILLIS. It is not.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire also to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is there no river appropriated for in this bill that is not an interstate river? Is there no river appropriated for that does not run through more than one State?

Mr. WILLIS. If there is I will join the gentleman in striking it out.

Mr. SKINNER. I could point out a hundred. There is the Osage River in Missouri.

The question being taken on Mr. SKINNER'S amendment, it was rejected.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving Hiawassee River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the appropriation for the French Broad River does not apply to the portion of the river above the navigable falls?

Mr. WILLIS. Not a dollar of it. I will state to the gentleman that a river may be navigable in a State and not navigable in the United States. This river passes out of North Carolina, goes into Tennessee, and below the falls becomes an interstate river.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Below what falls?

Mr. WILLIS. Below the falls you represent.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I do not represent any falls there. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Improving South Fork of Forked Deer River, Tennessee: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. GLASS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following:
"Improving the North Forked Deer from Dyersburg to the junction of the South Forked Deer, $10,000."

Mr. GLASS. This little stream is a meritorious object for national appropriation. The north and south forks make up the main stream in Tennessee, known as the Forked Deer River. The commerce of the North Fork to its junction with the South Fork is greater than the commerce of the South Fork above that junction. A survey was made in 1874 and appropriations were recommended by the engineers. Another survey was made in 1880 and appropriations were recommended by the engineers and estimates given for this stream for which I now ask an appropriation of $10,000. By some means the appropriation was made for the South Fork and not made for the North Fork. I can not understand why this difference should be made, because the business done on the North Fork for the last forty years has been considerable, and for many years past has been larger than the business done on the South Fork. I ask now, in view of the importance of this stream, which is very deep in high water and is now navigable for five months of the year, with a business on it amounting in the aggregate to more than one and a half million dollars, that this appropriation shall be made for it.

I see no reason, sir, why a discrimination should be made against this fork of the river while provision is made for the improvement of the South Fork, and for that reason I ask this appropriation.

Mr. HAMMOND. As this is a forked stream I move to give them one-half—$5,000 instead of $10,000.

Mr. WILLIS. The only difficulty here is that this river has not been surveyed, nor has an estimate been made for it in the present report. It is a stream, as the gentlemen from Tennessee says, of considerable importance; there is a large amount of business done upon it, in fact it is a much more important stream than gentlemen would imagine without an examination, but not having been surveyed, and no recommendation having been made for it, the committee has not felt warranted in proposing an appropriation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give the date of discovery of this river? I notice the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are constantly discovering new rivers unknown before.

Mr. WILLIS. Our telescope has not yet reached that point.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If this river is so important; if it has a considerable amount of commerce upon it, as gentlemen seem to concede and as the gentleman from Tennessee has stated, I would like to ask if this House is precluded from making an appropriation for it simply because the engineers have not made any estimate? In other words, are we hedged in by the reports of the engineers, and have we no power to go beyond them?

Mr. GLASS. Estimates for this improvement were made in 1880, but no action was taken upon them at that time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I favor the amendment of the gentleman so far as I am concerned; and I do not think it is a valid reason to oppose it that there has been no report upon it from the engineers if the necessities of commerce demand its improvement. I do not see why we should wait upon the engineers.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, one of the conditions upon which the House consented to take a recess was on a promise that I would move that the committee rise for the purpose of adjourning and beginning a new legislative day on Friday. I therefore move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WELLBORN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the river and harbor bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. WILLIS (at 11 o'clock and 58 minutes a. m., Friday), the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LABOR ARBITRATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Constitution imposes upon the President the duty of recommending to the consideration of Congress from time to time such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

I am so deeply impressed with the importance of immediately and thoughtfully meeting the problem which recent events and a present condition have thrust upon us, involving the settlement of disputes arising between our laboring men and their employers, that I am constrained to recommend to Congress legislation upon this serious and pressing subject.

Under our form of government the value of labor as an element of national prosperity should be distinctly recognized, and the welfare of the laboring man should be regarded as especially entitled to legislative care. In a country which offers to all its citizens the highest attainment of social and political distinction its workingmen can not justly or safely be considered as irrevocably consigned to the limits of a class and entitled to no attention and allowed no protest against neglect.

The laboring man, bearing in his hand an indispensable contribution to our growth and progress, may well insist, with manly courage and as a right, upon the same recognition from those who make our laws as is accorded to any other citizen having a valuable interest in charge; and his reasonable demands should be met in such a spirit of appreciation and fairness as to induce a contented and patriotic co-operation in the achievement of a grand national destiny.

While the real interests of labor are not promoted by a resort to threats and violent manifestations, and while those who under the pretext of an advocacy of the claims of labor wantonly attack the rights of capital, and for selfish purposes or the love of disorder sow seeds of violence and discontent, should neither be encouraged nor conciliated, all legislation on the subject should be calmly and deliberately undertaken, with no purpose of satisfying unreasonable demands or gaining partisan advantage.

The present condition of the relations between labor and capital are far from satisfactory. The discontent of the employed is due in a large degree to the grasping and heedless exactions of employers and the alleged discrimination in favor of capital as an object of governmental attention. It must also be conceded that the laboring men are not always careful to avoid causeless and unjustifiable disturbance.

Though the importance of a better accord between these interests is apparent, it must be borne in mind that any effort in that direction by the Federal Government must be greatly limited by constitutional restrictions. There are many grievances which legislation by Congress can not redress, and many conditions which can not by such means be reformed.

I am satisfied, however, that something may be done under Federal authority to prevent the disturbances which so often arise from disputes between employers and the employed, and which at times seriously threaten the business interests of the country; and, in my opinion, the proper theory upon which to proceed is that of voluntary arbitration as the means of settling these difficulties.

But I suggest that instead of arbitration chosen in the heat of conflicting claims, and after each dispute shall arise, there be created a commission of labor, consisting of three members, who shall be regular officers of the Government, charged among other duties with the consideration and settlement, when possible, of all controversies between labor and capital.

A commission thus organized would have the advantage of being a stable body, and its members, as they gained experience, would constantly improve in their ability to deal intelligently and usefully with the questions which might be submitted to them. If arbitrators are chosen for temporary service as each case of dispute arises, experience and familiarity with much that is involved in the question will be lacking, extreme partisanship and bias will be the qualifications sought on either side, and frequent complaints of unfairness and partiality will be inevitable. The imposition upon a Federal court of a duty so foreign to the judicial function as the selection of an arbitrator in such cases is at least of doubtful propriety.

The establishment by Federal authority of such a bureau would be a just and sensible recognition of the value of labor, and of its right to be represented in the departments of the Government. So far as its conciliatory offices shall have relation to disturbances which interfere with transit and commerce between the States, its existence would be justified under the provisions of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power "to regulate the commerce with foreign nations and among the several States." And in the frequent disputes between the laboring men and their employers, of less extent, and the consequences of which are confined within State limits and threaten domestic violence, the interposition of such a commission might be tendered upon the application of the Legislature or executive of a State, under the constitutional provision which requires the General Government to "protect" each of the States "against domestic violence."

If such a commission were fairly organized the risk of a loss of popular support and sympathy resulting from a refusal to submit to so peaceful an instrumentality would constrain both parties to such disputes to invoke its interference and abide by its decisions. There would also be good reason to hope that the very existence of such an agency would invite application to it for advice and counsel, frequently resulting in the avoidance of contention and misunderstanding.

If the usefulness of such a commission is doubted because it might lack power to enforce its decisions, much encouragement is derived from the conceded good that has been accomplished by the railroad commissions which have been organized in many of the States, which, having little more than advisory power, have exerted a most salutary influence in the settlement of disputes between conflicting interests.

In July, 1884, by a law of Congress, a Bureau of Labor was established and placed in charge of a Commissioner of Labor, who is required to "collect information upon the subject of labor, its relations to capital, the hours of labor, and the earnings of laboring men and women, and the means of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral prosperity."

The commission which I suggest could easily be ingrafted upon the bureau thus already organized by the addition of two more commissioners and by supplementing the duties now imposed upon it by such other powers and functions as would permit the commissioners to act as arbitrators when necessary between labor and capital, under such limitations and upon such occasions as should be deemed proper and useful.

Power should also be distinctly conferred upon this bureau to investigate the causes of all disputes as they occur, whether submitted for arbitration or not, so that information may always be at hand to aid legislation on the subject when necessary and desirable.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, April 22, 1886.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the message of the President be referred to the Committee on Labor, with instructions to report thereon by bill or otherwise on or before the 15th day of May next.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for supposing that the committee will not report at as early a date as practicable, and I think it is somewhat unusual to instruct the committee to report by a given day. I therefore hope the gentleman will not insist upon the motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do insist, because if this passes the committee will be required to make their report, and it will be in order to submit the report for consideration; otherwise it will have to be submitted under the rules of the House and may not be reached for consideration within a reasonable time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not sure that I caught the motion of the gentleman from Illinois correctly——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to refer the message of the President of the United States to the Committee on Labor, with instructions to report thereon by bill or otherwise on or before the 15th day of May next.

Mr. KELLEY. Is this motion divisible?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to substitute the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROGERS. If that amendment should be adopted where would it place the report when it comes in?

The SPEAKER. It will take its place on the Calendar with other business.

Mr. SPRINGER. In which case we can never reach it.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is divisible? I desire a vote first on referring it and afterward on the instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer in a moment. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to refer the message to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 51, noes 40.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for tellers, no quorum having voted.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. BUTTERWORTH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 76.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 76, nays 147, not voting 100; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. WEST. I object.

The names were read.

The following-named members were announced as paired:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon my motion to refer the message of the President to the Committee on Labor, with instructions to report by bill or otherwise before the 15th day of May next.

Mr. REED. I think it a great pity, Mr. Speaker, that we have not referred this measure to the Committee of the Whole, for that would have resulted in more speedy and more useful legislation.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Is the question on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois susceptible of division?

The SPEAKER. It has been decided three or four times by the House in previous Congresses, on an appeal from the decision of the Chair, that a motion to commit with instructions is not divisible, and although the present occupant of the Chair can see no good reason for the decision, that seems to be the settled practice of the House. However, the result which the gentleman has in view can be reached by voting down the motion to refer with instructions and adopting a simple motion to refer.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is it in order to move to amend the motion by striking out the part which relates to instructions?

The SPEAKER. If the demand for the previous question is not sustained that will be in order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If this motion should be voted down, would not the message go, under the rules, to the Committee on Labor?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRADY. Under the rules of the House, does the power exist to instruct a committee to report at a given time upon any measure referred to or pending before it?

The SPEAKER. The motion to commit to a committee with or without instructions is in order.

Mr. BRADY. Whether the subject is pending before the committee or not?

The SPEAKER. This matter is pending before the House. The proposition now is to send it to the Committee on Labor with instructions.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER for the previous question upon his motion to commit, and there were—ayes 87, noes 49.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion to refer the message to the Committee on Labor with instructions, as already stated.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is debate admissible?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the rules of the House there are now thirty minutes for debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the original motion to commit was not debatable at all.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to commit a proposition which has not been reported by a committee; and if unaccompanied with instructions it would not be debatable at all under the rules, but the Chair upon reflection is inclined to think that inasmuch as this is not a mere motion to commit, but includes instructions, it is debatable, there having been no debate upon it heretofore. A simple motion to commit, without instructions, a proposition which has not been reported to the House by a committee would not be debatable. The Chair thinks there are thirty minutes for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen in opposition.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I made a motion a few moments ago to refer this message of the President to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It was objected by some gentlemen that this motion was not wisely conceived, because this very important subject could not be reached for consideration at an early day. Sir, the time for the consideration of every question is within the control of this House. Every gentleman on this floor affects to believe (whether he does or not) that the subject-matter of this message is of vast consequence to the people of this country. There is no dissent, I take it, from that proposition. We all agree as to the importance of the question of which the message treats. If my motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had prevailed, it was my purpose to ask unanimous consent to fix an early day for its consideration, in the hope and expectation that it might be fairly and fully considered—not with a view to controlling the elections in November, but with a view to getting at a right solution of a great question.

I wish the people of this country could read what is passing in the minds of their assembled legislators here, and segregate the desire to do that which is best for the country—and by the country I mean the people and the whole people—from that which savors too much of a mere expedient to catch votes. I protest in the name of the manhood and the intelligence of the American people against any policy, purpose, or organization which segregates one part of my fellow-citizens and sets them apart as if they had any just interest or rightful claim properly in conflict with the great mass of this people. Who is there on this floor who hopes or expects that his children will eat bread except in accordance with God's ordinance, in the sweat of their faces. I have at my hearth-stone three boys, one of whom has suffered from the hand of affliction, and will fight the battle of life against fearful odds. I know that those boys must get their bread in accordance with the Divine command, in the sweat of their faces; and, speaking for my own hearth-stone and all others in my country, I protest against any legislation, against any resolution, against any organization, that shall segregate one of those boys or two, and set him or them apart as belonging to a peculiar portion of the great constituency that we represent; as belonging to a class possessing under the laws of our country less or fewer rights and privileges and fewer opportunities than their fellows, whoever and wherever they may be.

Gentlemen, you can not elevate labor. It is above and beyond your reach. God blessed labor in the beginning. We may and should do that which tends to ennoble and elevate the laborer, but we can not elevate labor. God blessed that in the beginning, when by His holy ordinance He commanded that in the sweat of our faces we should eat bread. Labor is not only noble but ennobling. I have no sympathy with that demagogism which seeks to catch votes, not by asking what is best for the hearth-stones of this land and those who assemble thereat, but what can we do to induce the struggling masses to believe that we are devoted to securing their happiness without crossing any plan, purpose, or inclination they cherish.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is a nation of laborers; that it is not of consequence where or how we labor to honorably fill life's mission, but do we live and labor worthily and well. We recognize no idlers save the gamblers, the loafers, and those who subsist by lawlessness, and they are few. We all get our bread in the sweat of our faces, whether our efforts are bestowed in one capacity or another. And this creates one great bond of sympathy between all our people. I am in favor of all those organizations which call together men of kindred sympathies, who, recognizing the universal brotherhood of mankind and the equal rights of all, seek to do that which will lift men up, make them better, and which gives them to understand that in this country, to those who practice industry, economy, and sobriety, the road to competence and excellence is open.

I submit that the bill we passed the other day, while probably not so intended, was still a hollow mockery and a sham. It was not even calculated to benefit those who labor; and when I say those who labor, I speak of every man who breathes the free air and treads the free soil of my country. The bill, as it seemed to me, was not intended to be anything but a "mere tub to a whale," a deliberate endeavor to catch votes. And it was evil in this, that it conveyed to the country the impression that "there rests in this Government the power to do away, and at once, by legislative enactment, with the attrition which unhappily exists between employer and employé." Your committee did not investigate the great subject they had in hand, and hence did not deal with it in a fitting manner. There was no endeavor, so far as appears, to ascertain the superinducing causes which create the necessity for a frequent redistribution of labor and consequent disturbance between employer and employé. There was no effort, so far as the bill and accompanying report disclose, to ascertain how encroachments upon the rights of the many by the efforts of the few were brought about; nor was a remedy suggested or hinted at. It occurred during the brief consideration which was accorded that bill that if an advocate of the measure had fifteen minutes to address this House he occupied eight minutes in abusing Jay Gould, six minutes in abusing corporations in general, and then surrendered the other minute in view of the fact that he could come no nearer to meeting the requirements of the occasion, being unable to suggest any remedy which ought to commend itself to the consideration of any intelligent legislative body.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Why did you not suggest a remedy?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You would not give me even time to say a word, much less to suggest a remedy.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. You got all the time you wanted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Your report kept pace line by line, pari passu, with the intelligence that gave it birth.

Mr. BLAND. We had a bill here which proposed to set the laborers of the country to work; and I would like to know how the gentleman voted on that. That is at the bottom of this whole trouble.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. "Still harping on my daughter!"

Mr. BLAND. It is the contraction of the currency, the want of money, that is impoverishing the people to-day.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If this House should go into a discussion of the doctrine of infant baptism, my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] would spring up and want to know why we should not baptize the children out of a basin purchased with standard silver dollars. [Great laughter, during which Mr. BLAND addressed a remark to Mr. BUTTERWORTH which could not be heard.]

What I desire, and what I think the country desires of this House, is intelligent investigation to ascertain how and why it is that it becomes necessary so often to redistribute labor, since it is in the redistribution of labor or effort that enforced idleness comes upon us, and consequent want. Intelligent investigation to ascertain the just relation between the producing capacity, as the means are employed to-day, and the needs of or necessary consumption by our people. To ascertain as well, if you please, how it occurs that when a grant of power is made to a corporation to exercise the right of eminent domain and all that appertains thereto, the prime object of the grant being to secure benefits to the public, the corporation which is the grantee of such power succeeds almost uniformly in making the public benefit, if any, the mere incident, while the greater benefit results to the corporation to whom the grant of power is made instead of to those who were intended to be the chief beneficiaries, the great public. These particular questions should be investigated, and without such investigation and the possession of the facts to be thereby ascertained there can be no wise and judicious solution of the problems involving the use and abuse of corporate power.

Relief will not be found in appeals to the prejudices and passions of men, but in calmly studying existing conditions and operating causes, and providing for them so far as it is within our power to do so.

I say to this House and to the country that any organization which has for its object and seeks to segregate, set apart, and divide into classes the citizens of this free country must spring from roots pulled at the very feet of the monarchs of Europe, and are the natural and inevitable outgrowth of the influence of monarchical power, and can have no proper place in the free soil of America. They are transplants from the Old World, where laws are unfriendly to the struggling masses, and where the people are not, as here, the sovereigns—sovereigns whose will is law.

Organization and concert of action are indispensable to successful effort, and where the people are sovereign rebellion against the law is rebellion against themselves.

There is no wrong that time, investigation, and manly effort can not and will not peaceably and lawfully redress.

Mr. Speaker, the organization of labor was founded by the fathers of this Republic. Every child born beneath the flag is a member of that organization, and can only forfeit his right to sit in its councils and share the blessings its efforts secure by idleness or crime, one or both. Any organization, no matter what its name, which excludes from its ranks any worthy citizen for any other cause must come to grief, or else by its efforts render unstable, if it does not overthrow, this Government.

Now, what I desire in this country, feeling interested as a toiler among my fellow-men, is that our children shall have a fair chance in the battle of life under equal and impartial laws; what I desire, Mr. Speaker, is that this House shall, at the earliest practicable day, give intelligent consideration to the great question to which attention is called in the message before us, instead of referring it to a committee which, without investigation, so far as appears, indicated its appreciation of the subject to an extent which enabled it in four hours to draught a bill, and in ten minutes to formulate a report on a question which had engaged the attention of the leading thinkers and workers of the world for more than a century; a bill which at most recognized that the struggling millions of our people had the right to arbitrate differences, a right as old as the Pandects and Code of Justinian, which was formulated that far back, and, having hinted at that right, the bill then proceeded to render it inexpedient to resort to it; and finally it was provided that if the parties did arbitrate it should not amount to anything.

This House, in the midst of threatened labor struggles in this country, growing out of alleged invasion of the just claims of the wage-workers, will have to study coolly the situation out of which grow the grievances we are called upon to redress. I had hoped, sir, by referring the President's message to this House sitting in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that we would secure that full, free, and fair discussion and consideration of the subject-matter of the message as its importance deserves, and that from such deliberation there might be evolved legislative action adequate to the needs of the hour, and not simply material deemed essential to meet the exigencies of the approaching campaign.

I regret having consumed so much time, but I could not refrain from giving the reasons which impelled me to move to refer the President's message to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has four minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I yield those four minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will reserve it for the present.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I must confess to a great deal of surprise at the heat and temper with which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has met this subject, and desire to direct his attention to one or two facts in this connection.

In the first place, it is made the duty of the President of the United States by the Constitution itself from time to time to communicate to Congress his views touching the condition of the country.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not interrupt the gentleman from Ohio, and I do not wish to be interrupted myself.

How does the Constitution read in this particular? It is as follows:

> He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

When the President has seen proper to comply with this constitutional injunction by communicating to Congress his opinion, how is he met here? He is met by an assault upon his motives. There is not one word uttered against the proposition he makes, and which in his judgment requires the attention of Congress. On the contrary, there is not an intelligent man in this country but knows the present condition of labor in the country should not only command the best attention of Congress, but that the Constitution imperatively demands of the President he should communicate his views touching this matter to the Congress of the United States. It is easy to question men's motives. I always supposed the right to question the motives of human beings rested with a higher power.

We ask in connection with this message that it shall have due consideration and the proper remedy be found, and, if possible, enacted into law as promptly as may be. There is not a word, so far as I have been able to find, in this message, and I have read it with some attention, that appeals to any party or to any class or to any sect of men in the United States. On the contrary, the President appeals in a broad, statesmanlike manner to this Congress as a body of American citizens charged with legislation for the public welfare. [Great applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this motion to commit this message with instructions, so that a matter of such vital importance may be first calmly considered in committee and reported to the House for its action.

I was quite surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who takes the position that this message should be first submitted to this House as a Committee of the Whole for what he calls a calm and deliberate consideration. Now, what kind of an example did the gentleman from Ohio set to the House himself a few moments since? Did he give it a calm and fair consideration? Why, sir, the very kind of consideration the gentleman gave it is that consideration which it would receive in the House if it was first considered here. The gentleman from Ohio also complains that no suggestion has been made that meets the difficulty involved in our present labor troubles. I ask, did he in the course of his remarks make any suggestions to meet the difficulties? Not one.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very easy thing to find fault; it is much easier to carp and criticise than to suggest remedies; but it requires a high order of statesmanship and calm deliberation to meet the underlying causes of the present labor troubles in this country; and the question should be first referred to a committee, there carefully considered, and then, when their report comes in, let the House consider it in Committee of the Whole, and amply consider it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I share with others who have addressed the House the surprise that has been expressed by them, that in an effort on the part of the administration to meet so great a question as now presents itself to the American Congress gentlemen upon the other side of the House should deliberately undertake to turn this purpose into a political discussion; for there was that and nothing else upon the part of the gentleman from Ohio. He has undertaken here to assail this House, or to charge the majority of it with not being willing to deal deliberately with the question which is suggested in this message; and yet he has suggested no proposition that would produce practicable results. He asks why we do not investigate the troubles which are existing, when he must know as a matter of fact that Congress has already appointed an investigating committee to investigate and report upon the troubles which his party has by twenty years of bad legislation brought upon the country, the trouble from which we are suffering to-day.

Yes, sir, the troubles we are suffering from, I repeat, have been brought upon this country by corrupt Congresses, by permitting combinations of corporations to oppress labor, by the watering of stocks; and it is the unjust abuse of the powers granted by Congress under which labor is suffering all over this country. All of these are the results of bad legislation; and yet gentlemen on the other side, when we undertake to consider this question with a view of affording relief, assail the House and the administration because we could not bring in a better remedy in a day for the troubles now existing and which will correct the abuses of their twenty-odd years of corrupt legislation. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, it should be their duty to come to our assistance, confess the crimes and sins of that corrupt period of misdoing, and try and devise a remedy.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Labor, Mr. O'NEILL.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the discussion in this House upon the arbitration bill ranged over a period of four days. By a remarkable circumstance not one single word of partisan bias was injected into that discussion. It passed the House by a four-fifths vote. That bill has been considered and unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and has been indorsed by the principal journals and the intelligence of the country; and it rested solely with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] to take advantage of the presentation of this message to indulge in a political harangue. He is so full of that subject that he could not resist the temptation. The gentleman from Ohio is like a man I once knew, who was particularly fond of telling a gun story, and if the conversation would not justify the introduction of it, this individual would stamp violently upon the floor with his heel, and then say, "Did you hear that noise? Didn't it sound very much like the report from a gun? And, by the way, speaking of guns, that reminds me of a story!" [Laughter.] My friend from Ohio has but the one speech, full of partisan bile and venom.

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentlaman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How much time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yielded two minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia and two to the gentleman from Missouri, but neither of them consumed the full time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the other side ought to finish, as the opening was made on this side. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I reserve the time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the bill reported from the Committee on Labor and I am satisfied with my vote.

I desire to say now that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], in undertaking to excuse the President for his message, is the only man who accused him. Nobody on this side of the House has found any fault with him, nor have we complained of the lateness of his arousing to the subject. [Laughter.]

The question before the House is not a question of who is to blame, what he ought to have done, or anything else of the kind. The question concerns the sensible order of the business of this House. What we desire to do, if we are honest men, is to fairly consider the questions which are stirring among the people.

It may be that we can afford some remedy. It may be that in the nature of things we can not. We are all bound to consider the question, and bound if we are honest men to consider it with reference to something else besides the November elections.

Here are new subjects for our consideration. Here are three hundred and twenty-five men, almost all of them—absolutely all of them, I will say—intelligent; nevertheless no one man knows everything. These new subjects need discussion. The President of the United States has seen fit to send us a message with a detailed plan and proposition, out of which must spring legislation if it is to do any good or non-action if we conclude we can do nothing. How shall we get at it? By an interchange of views and opinions, by the presentation of arguments pro and con, by discussing point by point the message, and then transmitting it to the committee to formulate it into a bill.

Now, surely that was a business proposition. I voted to refer the message to the Committee of the Whole in order that we might have that full discussion and that immediate discussion which the subject needed; and then when the bill was presented, if we concluded a bill ought to be presented, by an appropriate committee, then there would be a discussion of the details of the bill to make it conform with principles of sensible legislation. That is all I wish to say.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY].

Mr. MCCREARY. I voted a few days ago for what is known as the arbitration bill, and I was gratified when I read this morning the message of the President of the United States. That message contains a wise and thoughtful presentation of one of the most important problems now before the country. We are all compelled to admit that the relations between labor and capital are not as harmonious as we would like them to be. And I dare say we all desire that those relations shall be made more harmonious than they are now. The President's message looks to the attainment of that end, and the question now before the House is, shall the message be referred to the Committee on Labor? It seems very clear that this is the committee to which the message should be referred.

Like the gentleman from Maine, I desire wise legislation on this subject and desire full discussion when the proper time arrives, but I can see no reason why the President's message should not be referred now to the Committee on Labor, which was appointed to consider such subjects as are therein referred to. I believe when that committee reports a bill there should be the freest discussion in this House.

The true interests of labor are not promoted by threats or violence, neither are the best interests of capital advanced by oppression, reduction of wages, or unfair exactions. Labor and capital are dependent on each other and should stand together in the most friendly and peaceful association. Recent events and present conditions present to us a problem involving the settlement of disputes arising between laboring men and corporations.

I believe arbitration should be given a fair trial. Public sentiment and fair arbitration of disputes will often restore harmony and good feeling. We should recognize in this country that laboring men have rights, and we should recognize also that those who have capital have rights, and the proper way to increase prosperity and happiness is by cultivating harmony and pleasant relations between both classes. Under our system of government the laboring man and the capitalist are entitled to equal recognition.

When the Congress of the United States, by its enactments, indicates to laboring men a desire to protect them in their rights and encourages their industry and furnishes an avenue for the settlement of their disagreements with their employers, I believe good results will follow.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the motion to commit this message of the President to the Committee on Labor for the reason that that committee was created for the express purpose of considering propositions of this kind. I made the motion to commit with instructions, because I desire to respond promptly to the recommendations of the President of the United States contained in the message which is under consideration.

The President makes this statement in his message:

> I am so deeply impressed with the importance of immediately and thoughtfully meeting the problem which recent events and a present condition have thrust upon us, involving the settlement of disputes arising between our laboring men and their employers, that I am constrained to recommend to Congress legislation upon this serious and pressing subject.

This is the first instance, I believe, in the history of our country in which the President of the United States has made the rights and welfare of workingmen the subject of a special message to Congress. He has grasped the whole problem of labor, and asked the representatives of the people to meet, by appropriate legislation, immmediately and thoughtfully, the problem which recent events and the present condition of the country have thrust upon us. Will Congress respond in the spirit which has actuated the President in calling attention to this important subject? That is the question which is involved in my motion. An ordinary reference of the message to the Committee on Labor would not enable the committee to secure a consideration of its report during this session, owing to the crowded condition of our Calendars; a reference to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union would consign it to the tomb of dead legislative measures; but by referring, as my motion proposes, with instructions to report thereon by bill or otherwise on or before the 15th of May next, the bill or measure reported will be before the House for final consideration and adoption.

I desire to meet this wise and thoughtful message of the Executive in the proper spirit, and for the purpose of having it considered with the view of reporting legislation I have made the motion now pending before the House.

The proposition to refer the message to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was in effect a motion to refer it to a committee that had no power to reach it under the rules of the House, and if it should be reached under the rules of the House that committee had no power to do anything except to discuss it and report it back to the House again. It was simply a place to bury this measure where it could not possibly be reached under the rules of the House and in the present condition of our business.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. Is it not a fact that during the debate on the labor arbitration bill this very proposition was fully discussed by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SPRINGER. The report of the Committee on Labor was discussed, but the President of the United States has submitted another and in my judgment a much more effective means of meeting this great difficulty. We know the present condition of the country. We know how many of the great cities of the country are now in a disturbed condition on this subject.

Laborers are striking in Illinois, in New York, in Kansas, in Texas, in Arkansas, all over the country these difficulties are occurring, and every man knows that we ought to meet this question now. It will not do, as gentlemen upon the other side seem to think, to put this matter off by simply talking about it. We must act. I have no patience with that statesmanship which continually says "you are doing nothing," when those who raise that cry propose to do nothing themselves. If gentlemen upon the other side have a better proposition to make than that which the President of the United States has submitted in the message just read, they will have an opportunity to submit their proposition to the House and have it duly considered when this question is again brought up for discussion and action.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this motion will be adopted, and that the House will at once enter upon the consideration of this greatest of all the questions which are now agitating the American people and arrive at a proper and sensible solution of the great labor problem. If this House will properly settle and dispose of that great question at this session of Congress, we shall have done more to benefit our constituents and the great mass of people of this country than has been accomplished by any previous Congress in the last twenty years.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, had I been in the House when his motion was made to commit the President's message to the Committee on Labor with instructions to report as early as the 15th of May I would have suggested to my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] a longer time or later day. He can hardly have forgotten that we have appointed and sent out a committee to get some information which may be of service to us in the consideration of this question. It may be impossible for that committee to complete its work and report to the House as early as the 15th of May, and therefore I suggest that if we commit with instructions as to any time at all the time ought to be extended. There should be time for information and thoughtful consideration.

The SPEAKER. The time for debate has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. When the committee reports its bill the discussion of it can be postponed if that is found to be desirable.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is, they can report the bill first and get the information afterward. That is a good idea.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER to refer the message to the Committee on Labor with instructions to report by bill or otherwise before the 15th of May next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMISSIONS TO COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, urging the immediate passage of a bill to amend section 3314 of the Revised Statutes repealing commissions to collectors of internal revenue; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the acting Secretary of the Interior of an appropriation for the force in the census division of that Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BUILDING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Solicitor-General of an appropriation for fitting up a portion of the building occupied by the Department of Justice; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MAGDALENA REHKOFF.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3351) granting a pension to Mrs. Magdalena Rehkopf, with Senate amendments.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4, strike out "Rehkopf," where it occurs the first time, and insert "Rehkoff;" in line 4, strike out "Rehkopf," where it occurs the second time, and insert "Rehkoff." Amend the title so as to read, "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Magdalena Rehkoff."

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

JOHN CLARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3375) granting a pension to John D. Clark, with Senate amendments.

The amendments proposed to strike out the name "John D. Clark," where it occurred in the bill and in the title, and to insert "John Clark."

On motion of Mr. LYMAN, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

WILLIAM G. SCHOONOVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3390) to place the name of William G. Schoonover on the pension-roll with Senate amendments.

The amendments proposed to strike out the name "Schoonozer," where it occurs in the bill and also in the title, and to insert the name "Schoonover," making the title read, "An act to place the name of William G. Schoonover on the pension-roll."

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the following titles returned from the Senate with amendments; which were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The bill (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark—to the Committee on Pensions.

MISS ROSA WALLACE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1805) for the relief of Miss Rosa Wallace; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MCRAE. A House bill identical with this has been reported favorably from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Miss Rosa Wallace be, and she is hereby, released from all liability for the sum of $381 which was lost by a robbery of the mails at or near Hope, Ark., on or about the 30th day of November, A. D. 1884.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were read twice, and referred as indicated:

NATIONAL MONUMENT AT PLYMOUTH, MASS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2224) in aid of the national monument at Plymouth, Mass.

Mr. LONG. As this bill, after consideration by the Joint Committee on the Library, has been reported unanimously, and has passed the Senate, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2224) in aid of the national monument at Plymouth, Mass.

Whereas a national monument to the Pilgrim forefathers is in progress of construction at Plymouth, Mass., consisting of a central figure of Faith and of four subordinate statues representing Morality, Education, Law, and Liberty, of which five the first three have already been erected: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting said statue of liberty and the bas-relief accompanying the same, under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading, and accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair thinks the noes have it.

Mr. LONG. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 10.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, and Mr. LONG.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to say a word on this matter, inasmuch as there has been no debate, and perhaps something should have been said before the vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Massachusetts will be permitted to proceed. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LONG. I simply desire to say this is not a new enterprise which the United States is asked to undertake and pay for. Request is made for aid in the erection of a monument to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth Rock, Massachusetts—a monument already in process of construction and nearly finished. The State of Massachusetts has appropriated $10,000. The State of Connecticut has appropriated $10,000. Contributors all over the Union have given to the fund various sums. Mr. Oliver Ames gave, although nobody knew of it until after his death, a very much larger sum for the central figure of Faith, 36 feet high. That colossal figure is to be surrounded by four subordinate figures, two of which have been already finished. Two more, those of Law and Liberty, are desired, and it was thought proper to ask the United States to contribute one of these to complete the group. I think it is the only case in which the General Government has contributed toward the erection of a monument in the State of Massachusetts.

It is unnecessary, sir, to refer to the event which this monument commemorates, the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers and the consequent foundation of our free institutions. This matter is one which I would not like to urge upon the House if Congress had not in several instances taken similar action. But inasmuch as we have entered upon the policy of erecting monuments in certain cases, this is certainly a case where I take it the General Government will be glad to join to the modest extent of this bill.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I do not object, Mr. Speaker, to the people of the State of Massachusetts erecting a monument to the Pilgrim Fathers upon Plymouth Rock, and perhaps it is suitable they should do so, but I do object to such a monument being erected in Massachusetts at the expense of the whole nation. If such a monument be erected in Massachusetts at the public expense, then I hold the people of my State have the same right to come here and demand that a monument shall be erected to the first settlers of North Carolina who landed on Roanoke Island in the ships of the gallant Sir Walter Raleigh. But inasmuch as I would make no such demand in behalf of the people of North Carolina, I shall oppose to the bitter end any appropriation being voted in this House for the purpose of constructing a monument in Massachusetts to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, and Mr. LONG.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. It is apparent, Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum in the House, and I will therefore withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER. On a division there were 71 in the affirmative and 10 in the negative. The point of no quorum having been withdrawn, the bill is passed.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISABELLA J. RAMSDELL.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5022) granting an increase of the pension of Isabella J. Ramsdell, and move to concur in the Senate amendment. I would say that the amendment in question was made in the House, but through some error in engrossing the bill went to the Senate without being so amended. As the bill comes back from the Senate it is exactly as it would have left the House except through the mistake of the engrossing clerk. I therefore move that the amendment be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill (H. R. 5022) increasing the pension of Isabella J. Ramsdell, returned from the Senate with amendments, will be taken up for present consideration, and the Clerk will read the amendment of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

"And that the same begin at the death of her said husband, deducting therefrom the amount she has received under act of Congress approved July 1, 1884."

So it will read:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the rate of pension of Isabella J. Ramsdell, widow of David D. Ramsdell, who for over thirty years was a marine in the United States service, to $30 per month."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. JAMES moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER. There are one hundred and forty-four Senate bills granting pensions, and instead of the Clerk reading the title of each one separately, the Chair will see they are properly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions and placed in the Journal and in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly; and the Senate bills included in the message from the Senate yesterday were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions in accordance with the rules of the House.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise to a question of privilege, and send up to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to inquire and report to the House whether Hon. L. D. M. Swett, or any other ex-member of the House, who has availed himself of the privilege of admission to the floor, under Rule XXXIV, is interested as agent or attorney for any railroad or other corporation or any other interest in any claim or bill pending before Congress, and to report to the House the result of such inquiry with such recommendations as may be necessary.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, it has been an open secret that ever since the beginning of this Congress a lobby, powerfully organized in the interest of various railroad corporations in this country, has infested this Capitol, and that the rules of this House have been openly, repeatedly, and notoriously set at defiance by some members of said lobby. Ever since I took my seat upon this floor as a Delegate in this House I have encountered upon the floor during the sessions of the House an ex-member of Congress whose acquaintance I first made while he was appearing as an attorney for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company before the Committee on the Public Lands, of which I am a member. He appeared before that committee in the capacity of an attorney, and made a lengthy argument antagonizing the favorable consideration of any measure looking to the forfeiture of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Since that time repeatedly he has been on the floor of the House, and his appearance here has been almost of daily occurrence.

I have hesitated, Mr. Speaker, before obtruding myself upon the attention of this body in connection with this question, in the hope that some one older in service and better able to present it than I would do so. I have been disappointed in this hope, and I am unwilling longer to shrink from so plain and so manifest a duty.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in the early part of this month I introduced a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, directing the Secretary of the Interior to obtain from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company certain information in connection with certain alleged violations of law on the part of said company.

I appeared before the committee and explained the scope and purport of the resolution, after which it was referred to a subcommittee. Yesterday afternoon I was advised by the chairman of the subcommittee that the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company would be heard, and I was invited to be present on that occasion. I availed myself of that invitation, and upon appearing before the subcommittee found the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company flanked by the Hon. L. D. M. Swett, the ex-member of Congress referred to. Upon the conclusion of the remarks of the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company Mr. Swett, after advising the subcommittee of his status as one of the representatives of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in Washington, resisted the favorable consideration of this resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, is it within the contemplation of Rule XXXIV that ex-members of this House, having exhausted their resources in behalf of their clients before the committees of the House, are to be permitted to serve them upon this floor? I do not believe it will be seriously contended that such is the scope and intent of this rule. I insist, Mr. Speaker, that if there is any integrity whatever in Rule XXXIV every appearance of Mr. Swett or any other ex-member of this House upon this floor holding the relation to this corporation or to any other corporation or interest that this gentleman does is an assault upon the safety, dignity, and integrity of the proceedings of this House, and a total subversion of its rules. I am aware, sir, that this rule for some years past has "been more honored in the breach than in the observance" thereof; and yet a more salutary rule has no place in the code of the rules of this House.

To permit the presence upon this floor, during the sessions of the House, of any attorney representing pending interests, and especially such interests as those of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, is a deadly thrust at the independence of the legislator and an unhealthy indication of the potency of corporate influence in the halls of legislation.

I, Mr. Speaker, as a very humble member of the House, desire here and now to protest against the continuance of this rank and crying abuse, and I ask the adoption of this resolution as the first step in the direction of this much-needed reform.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Washington Territory permit me to ask him if he would not be willing to modify his resolution so as to make it a select committee? It will be a difficult matter for the Committee on Rules to consider it. The Speaker of the House, the chairmen of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Appropriations Committee, and other gentlemen composing the Committee on Rules, are very much engaged in other public matters.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am entirely willing to accept a modification.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would suggest, say, a select committee of five members.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am perfectly willing to adopt that suggestion, and will modify the resolution accordingly.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let the resolution be read as it will stand if modified.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Washington Territory; but I want to say first, as to this Mr. Swett, that I have never heard of him before. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows of any instance where this man Swett has attempted to corrupt any member of this House on the floor of the House or to use his influence on the floor of the House for or against any measure. The true way to make known a virtue is to advertise it, and I want to see where it comes in.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois that so far as the scope of this investigation is concerned it is a matter entirely foreign to it as to whether or not Mr. Swett has been engaged in purchasing members of Congress. Rule XXXIV, after enumerating other persons who are entitled to the floor, reads as follows:

Ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress.

I have stated here, on my personal responsibility, that Mr. Swett stated in my hearing that he appeared in Washington as one of the representatives of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; and it makes no difference to the scope of the inquiry as to whether he has been engaged in this business on the floor of the House or not. He has been in a committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. Where did the gentleman say he appeared?

Mr. VOORHEES. He appeared before the Committee on Pacific Railroads and the Committee on the Public Lands, and resisted the legislation to which I have referred.

Mr. DUNHAM. He appeared on behalf of a railroad company?

Mr. VOORHEES. He appeared on the side on which the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company appeared.

Mr. DUNHAM. Before a committee of the House?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir. I have no objection to striking out Mr. Swett's name as far as that is concerned. I want to get at the evil, and merely mentioned his name as being a matter within my personal knowledge.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not ask the gentleman to strike out the name. My object was to have it come out, if it was true, that this gentleman had done anything wrong on the floor of the House. If he has appeared before a committee as an attorney, he probably had a right as an American citizen to do so. If he has been on the floor attempting to corrupt any member of this House as a representative of this railroad, or even attempting to do it in his own private capacity as a citizen, it would be all well enough to investigate. But as the matter stands, it looks to me as nothing more or less than a little sort of buncombe.

Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to be permitted one word in response to the gentleman from Illinois. I disclaim any intention to reflect on any gentleman who has been previously a member of this House. That is not my purpose. I am seeking to get at and strike at a gross and crying abuse, which has in years past made this House a laughing-stock to the country.

Mr. WILKINS. I guess not.

Mr. DUNHAM. I still think there is more buncombe in this than anything else.

Mr. REAGAN. It is notorious that the violation of this rule has been habitual. Whenever questions come up involving the interests of the railroad corporations, gentlemen who have been ex-members of the House have appeared before committees and advocated their claims and are found upon the floor. We either ought to abolish the rule or to enforce it. I hope this resolution will be adopted, and that the effect of it will be to have the rule enforced.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to be fair to every human being. I would like to know whether there is anything that the gentleman from Washington Territory knows wherein this gentleman whose name appears in the resolution has on this floor violated the privileges of the House. I served with that gentleman in a past Congress and I have seen him here from time to time, but he has never in any instance spoken to me on the subject of railroad matters.

Mr. DUNHAM. And probably to nobody else on this floor.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will settle this whole question by moving to strike out the name of Hon. L. D. M. Swett, and make the resolution comprehensive enough to include everybody who has infringed the rule.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as my voice and vote are concerned they will go to exclude every ex-member of Congress from this floor who exercises an attorneyship here for the benefit of a corporation. But I do not like this mode of mentioning names till the whole story on each side has been told.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been modified.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think after an investigation has taken place we will possibly have to come to some understanding in the House as to what should be done in this matter. The evil to be remedied is the taking advantage by ex-members of their right to the floor to urge measures on the floor of the House. But it is perfectly notorious ex-members have often appeared before the Elections Committee and then upon the floor of the House; but as long as they do not ply their vocation in any way on the floor of the House their rights as ex-members should not be interfered with. The evil we want to prevent is not ex-members appearing before committees; it is ex-members talking to members on the floor of the House for or against a measure. There is no charge any such thing has been done in this instance, and I am glad to see the resolution modified so as to make this thing general and not undertake to stigmatize any one by name.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the gentleman insists on the previous question, will he permit me to disclaim any purpose to stigmatize Mr. Swett? As I stated before, I put his name in the resolution because I knew of instances within my own knowledge where he had appeared before a committee. I did not put his name in the resolution as stigmatizing him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILKINS. Is it in order to move to lay the resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was then taken; and the resolution of Mr. VOORHEES was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that there are two House bills with Senate amendments of a formal character, and if there be no objection they will be disposed of now.

MRS. B. ALFERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3945) for the relief of Mrs. B. Alfers.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 3, strike out "Bretano" and insert "Brentano."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

PROTECTION OF HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 129) to protect homestead settlers within railroad limits, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "cultivation," in line 8, down to and including line 10. Strike out section 2.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] will please give his attention. One of the amendments to this bill appears not to be a merely formal amendment. It proposes to strike out an entire section of the bill.

Mr. MCRAE. If it is not merely a formal amendment it is certainly unimportant and unobjectionable, Mr. Speaker. It in no way changes the force and application of the bill as this House passed it. The section which it proposes to strike out simply provides that all previous laws in conflict or inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed, and the Senate thought this unusual, unnecessary, and superfluous, as is shown by the report of the Senate committee. I do not attach any importance to this general repealing section, and in drawing the bill added it because I thought it was customary to add it as a precaution, and in order to put at rest the legislative intention to repeal any law that might be in conflict with it. Since the Senate are disposed to be hypercritical about such matters, I am perfectly willing that section may be stricken out, and I hope the House will concur in the amendment without any delay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear what it is proposed to strike out.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following words in section 1: "And in all such entries patents shall issue as soon as reported to and approved by the General Land Commissioner."

Mr. HOLMAN. That seems to be an important amendment, and I think it had better be considered more carefully.

Mr. MCRAE. It has been considered, Mr. Speaker, and that amendment is suggested for the reason that they do not desire in the Land Office to give precedence to entries of this character over others. It does not interfere with the policy of the bill. The patents will issue in due course, but the Senate Committee on the Public Lands insists that if the bill passes in the form in which I drew it and in which it passed the House entries of this kind would have precedence, and patents under this law would have to be issued out of order. I do not insist upon that, and never intended that the language used should have any such meaning.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the bill read.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendments?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were then concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a special order which I desire to have adopted for the consideration of bills on this day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman must first move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the motion to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees. I move that the formal call be dispensed with, but that any gentleman who desires to present a report of a private character may be permitted to do so.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5208, a bill (H. R. 8102) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories."

JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

Mr. SMALLS, by unanimous consent, filed the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 1623) for the relief of Jesse H. Strickland; and the same were ordered to be printed with the majority report, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

OSCAR EASTMOND AND JAMES W. ATWILL.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill, and the same be put on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be issued and delivered to Oscar Eastmond a commission as colonel and to James W. Atwill a commission as lieutenant-colonel of the First Regiment North Carolina Volunteers, to date as of June 20, 1865, and to cause them to be duly mustered out as of date June 27, 1865: Provided, That this act, and the said commissions and musters-out issued thereunder, shall not entitle said Eastmond and Atwill, or either of them, or any person claiming by, through, under, or from them, or either of them, to any pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind whatever, and shall only entitle them respectively to the rank of colonel and lieutenant-colonel of said regiment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be a word of explanation first.

Mr. DOCKERY. If there be no objection I will make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. After a word of explanation, Mr. Speaker, I think there will be no objection urged on the part of any gentleman to the passage of the bill. These parties were commissioned on the 20th of June, 1865, but their commissions failed to reach them before their regiment was mustered out. The bill merely gives them the honorary rank to which they were entitled, and which they would have had if their commissions had promptly reached them by mail. It does not cost the Government a single cent.

Mr. STEELE. That is true; it will not cost the Government a single cent.

Mr. DOCKERY. I may also add that it has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. STEELE. It is; and that Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, and by that committee reported unanimously.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, there is further objection, and I ask for a vote on my motion.

Mr. DOCKERY'S motion was agreed to; and the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was brought before the House for present consideration.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there are a great number of gentlemen who have private claims they desire to call up, and if the House will adopt the order which I send to the desk to be read it will enable us to take them up and dispose of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That when the House on this day resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar it shall be in order to take up bills in their order, and, after five minutes' explanation, the question shall be put to the committee whether there is objection to the present consideration of the bill; and if five persons object to its consideration, such bill shall be passed over informally and the next bill shall be taken up for consideration in like manner. Bills to the consideration of which there are not five persons objecting shall be subject to ten minutes' debate, five minutes in favor of the bill and five minutes against it, when the question shall be put upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is proposed for this day.

The SPEAKER. That is all.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion until I can present a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw it for that purpose for a moment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to be absent from the House for some time in execution of an order of the House, and I would like to have unanimous consent in order that a bill may be taken up for action at this time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his objection to my proposition, and then all these bills can be acted upon promptly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would not ask for unanimous consent but for the circumstances in which I am placed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the circumstances I think the gentleman should have unanimous consent.

D. L. BRAINARD.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask by unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1541) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be paid from money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $703.75 cents, this sum to be in lieu of commutations of fuel and quarters and extra-duty pay, as follows: Commutation for fuel from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1884 (thirty-six months), at $9 per month, $324; commutation for quarters from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1882 (twelve months), at $21 per month, $252; extra-duty pay from July 1, 1883, to June 30, 1884, at 35 cents per diem, $127.75, and to be paid to each of the following persons, namely: David L. Brainard, Julius R. Frederick, Henry Biederbick, Francis Long, Maurice Connell, David Linn, Joseph Elison, Nicholas Salor, William A. Ellis, Charles B. Henry, William Whistler, Jacob Bender, Roderick R. Schneider, David C. Ralston, Hampden S. Gardner, Edward Israel, Winfield S. Jewell, George W. Rice, and William H. Cross, of the United States Army, who were on duty with Lieut. A. W. Greely in the arctic regions from July 1, 1881, to June 30, 1884: Provided, however, That if any of said men shall have died before the passage of this act, or shall die before the actual payment of the sum herein named, the sum hereby directed to be paid shall, in each such case, be paid to the widow of such deceased man, if any him surviving; if no widow, then to his children, if any; if no widow or children, then to the next of kin.

Mr. BRAGG. I object; and the ground of my objection is the bill does not belong to the war claims, as it relates to fuel and rations since the war.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not hear what was said by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I said that it does not belong to the war claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did not say it did.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to go into Committee of the Whole House to resume the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. The first four bills on the Calendar were reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, and I have been requested by the chairman of that committee [Mr. HALSELL] to ask that those bills be passed over informally, not to lose their place upon the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The titles of the bills will be read.

The titles were read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4840) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

A bill (H. R. 218) to confirm a certain private land claim in the Territory of New Mexico.

A bill (H. R. 3216) to confirm the title to that certain land grant "Tres Alamos," in Arizona Territory.

A bill (H. R. 3235) to confirm title to certain private land claims in Arizona Territory.

There was no objection, and the bills were passed over informally.

CHRISTOPHER SCHAEFNOCKER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2195) for the relief of Christopher Schaefnocker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Christopher Schaefnocker, late second lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 24th day of May, A. D. 1862, to the 4th day of August, 1862.

Mr. GEDDES. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2195) for the relief of Christopher Schoefnocker, late second lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

From the records of the War Department it appears that Christopher Schoefnocker entered the service May 24, 1862, as a second lieutenant, Company D, One hundred and ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served in that capacity until August 4, 1862; that he has not been paid for said services for the reason that the paymaster decided that his muster was not legal.

It appears from the sworn statement of the officers of the company and regiment of which the said Schoefnocker was a second lieutenant, and other reliable witnesses, that said Christopher Schoefnocker did actually serve in the capacity and discharged the duties of second lieutenant from the 24th of May, 1862, to August 4, 1862.

A bill granting relief and authorizing and directing pay for said services passed this House in the Forty-eighth Congress, but was not reached in the Senate.

In view of the fact that the Government justly owes the claimant the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant during the time he so served, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. BACON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3384) for the relief of James M. Bacon.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, in the settlement and adjustment of the accounts of James M. Bacon, late a lieutenant in the First Regiment Dakota Cavalry Volunteers, to allow credit for the disbursement of the public funds disbursed by him as acting assistant quartermaster on account of the expenses incurred by the Northwest Indian expedition in the months of July, August, September, October, and November, 1864, and for the disbursement of which proper vouchers were taken, but which were lost or destroyed through no fault or neglect of said officer, upon satisfactory evidence being furnished of the actual disbursements of said funds for the benefit of the public service.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) is as follows:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 581, of the Committee on War Claims, first session Forty-eighth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of James M. Bacon, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

A bill similar in all respects to this was, at the last session of Congress, referred to this committee, and the following report thereon was submitted to the House by Mr. GEDDES:

"That in the month of June, 1864, Bvt. Maj. Gen. Alfred Sully, in command of the first military district of the department of the Northwest, organized an expedition against the hostile Sioux Indians in the Upper Missouri River country. About the time said command started on its march, James M. Bacon, late first lieutenant First Regiment Dakota Volunteers, cavalry, was by General Sully assigned to duty as acting assistant quartermaster for said expedition, and he joined the command at Fort Randall. There were a large number of citizen employés with the expedition. With the concurrence of General Sully, a man by the name of William S. Linn, who had been in the employ of the quartermaster's department at Saint Louis, was employed on similar service with said command; and, as said Bacon had had no experience in such duties, and, as stated by himself, had little aptitude for them, almost the entire business, so far as the clerical affairs of office were concerned, was confided to this clerk. He was esteemed both honest and competent, but addicted to occasional excessive dissipation.

"The expedition was not supplied with quartermaster's funds, and a pay-roll was made out, and by order of General Sully, a sufficient sum was borrowed of the sutler to pay the employés on their arrival at the Yellowstone River. The same process was repeated at Forts Rice, Sully, and Randall on the return trip. The amount so paid out was reimbursed by Bacon on the arrival of the command at Sioux City from funds furnished by the district quartermaster, upon the presentation of a proper pay-roll and receipts. Lieutenant Bacon, with the assistance of his clerk, then set about the work of preparing his accounts for transmissal to the proper accounting officers at Washington, and when so prepared in duplicate they were sent by the hands of the clerk (Linn) to Dubuque, then General Sully's headquarters, for his approval. The general, however, being absent in Chicago on special duty, Linn proceeded to that place and presented the accounts to General Sully, by whom they were approved. From that time to this Lieutenant Bacon states, and all the facts corroborate his statement, that he has neither seen nor heard of said Linn directly, nor has he ever been able to gain any trace of the missing papers.

In May, 1865, only some two months subsequent to said approval of the vouchers, General Sully certified to the fact of said examination and approval, and, further, that, to the best of his recollection and belief, these papers and vouchers closed the accounts of said Lieutenant Bacon. Maj. William Myers, quartermaster, United States Army, states that Lieutenant Bacon's account of the transaction, which is much more in detail than the foregoing, is correct, except that he (Myers) had no knowledge of the special assignment of Linn to duty as clerk with the expedition. Hon. Sylvester Bagg, now, or at the time of the making of his affidavit, judge of the circuit court of the ninth judicial district of Iowa, but at the time of the transactions referred to chief quartermaster of the military district, testifies that Lieutenant Bacon was assigned to duty with the expedition at his (Bagg's) instance; that he furnished Lieutenant Bacon the funds as stated above, and that the pay-rolls and accounts were correct and properly receipted; that subsequently Lieutenant Bacon prepared his returns for submission to the accounting officers of the Government, and that he (affiant) personally and carefully examined the same and found that they were correct and corresponded with the reports submitted to him, and that they showed that the funds had been properly expended by Bacon, as shown by the receipted vouchers filed with the returns; that he notified General Sully of such examination; that said accounts were sent to General Sully, as stated above, and that subsequently General Sully told him (Bagg) that he had examined and approved the same. Affiant further states that to his knowledge the clerk, Linn, never returned to Sioux City, nor in any manner accounted for the papers intrusted to him; and that it was currently reported and believed that said Linn 'got on a drunken spree and absconded,' and that he (affiant) has not since seen or heard of him. This affidavit is dated November 14, 1878. An affidavit of General Sully is also submitted, dated August 5, 1878, which is corroborative of the statements made in the foregoing. He says 'that it is impossible for him at this late date to recollect the number of citzens employed by Lieutenant Bacon, or the amounts paid them, but he knows that by Lieutenant Bacon's accounts the number and prices paid were correct.'

"The Quartermaster-General and Secretary of War both recommended that Lieutenant Bacon be relieved of this accountability. The committee are entirely satisfied from all the testimony that the amount for which this claimant is held was properly disbursed and accounted for, and that the failure of the returns and vouchers to reach their destination at Washington was through no fault of his. They find that he is not indebted to the Government in any sum whatever; and, further, they do not hesitate to express their belief, from all the evidence submitted, and all the facts brought to their knowledge, that Mr. Bacon is a man of undoubted integrity, and that his claim to be relieved of this recorded accountability is one that commends itself to the prompt action of Congress.

"The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

The committee believe the foregoing to be a fair and correct statement of the facts in this case, and therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY GEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 248) for the relief of Henry Gee.

Mr. ELY. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill No. 248 be passed over informally in consequence of the absence of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GREEN] who reported it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WILLIE S. HOWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the resolution introduced by Mr. HOLMAN on the 26th of January:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be directed to inquire into the propriety of Willie S. Howard being employed as a page or folder under the Doorkeeper during the residue of the present session of Congress, and to report by resolution or otherwise.

Mr. HOLMAN. That subject has been disposed of. I suggest, therefore, that it be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

The resolution is as follows:

Whereas by act of Congress approved February 27, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for settlement with certain railway companies," the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General were authorized to make such abatements in the accounts of the companies named in said act as they might find just; and

Whereas the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General having determined and agreed upon a basis for such abatements and settlements, it was found that the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company had so far paid its accounts that the abatements determined upon would not only extinguish the balance claimed against said company, but would also require the return of a portion of the money already paid by it; and

Whereas the said act not making any appropriation or provision for the return of any money, no settlement was made with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company as contemplated by said act, and its accounts still remain unadjusted and unsettled: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, jointly, to adjust and finally settle the accounts of the United States with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company for property received from the United States in the years 1865 and 1866, as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 27, 1875, and upon the same basis of settlement and upon the same terms and conditions as was done with other companies included in said act.

SEC. 2. That when said accounts have been adjusted, if it shall be found that the adjustment upon the basis herein provided for requires the return of any money heretofore paid by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company on said accounts, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue his warrant on the Treasury of the United States in favor of said company for the amount of money so to be returned; and the amount necessary for such purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. This reading of the resolution does not give much information of the purport, extent, or scope of the measure. I suggest at least that before the gentleman from Alabama proceeds with his remarks the report be read for the information of the committee.

Mr. OATES. In the course of my remarks I will state the substance of the report, which I think will save the time of the committee.

About the close of the war, I believe in the latter part of 1865 or early in 1866, the Government sold to a number of railroad companies, among them the Mobile and Ohio road, a quantity of rolling-stock and other materials useful to them in the operation of their roads, and which in the case of the road in question amounted in the aggregate to something over $500,000.

Time was allowed to the company to pay this amount. Payments were made in money and by the transportation of troops and mails of the Government from year to year until 1875. There being a number of other railroad companies similarly situated in the Southern States, having purchased rolling-stock of the Government at prices placed upon it then which were deemed exorbitant, Congress passed an act which I will request the Clerk to read in order that the committee may fully understand it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War and Attorney-General are hereby authorized and empowered jointly to adjust and settle the claims of the United States against

The Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire,
The Edgefield and Kentucky,
The Knoxville and Kentucky,
The McMinnville and Manchester,
The Mobile and Ohio,
The Memphis, Clarksville and Louisville,
The Memphis and Little Rock,
The Nashville and Northwestern,
The Southwestern Branch Pacific Railroad of Missouri, and
The Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad Companies, and all persons and corporations having any interest in the subject growing out of the sale and transfer by the United States of any rights or property to said railway companies above named, respectively, in the years 1865 and 1866, or both, by making such abatement in the amount of such claims, respectively, as shall be deemed just, in respect of an overvaluation, if any, of the property sold, not exceeding 25 per cent. of the valuation of the property in each case, as made under the authority of the War Department on the occasion of such sales: Provided, That such settlements shall be made within one year next after the passage of this act; and that good and sufficient security be given to the United States by or on behalf of the parties in interest, respectively, who do not pay in cash at the time of settlement, for the payment, with interest, of such sums as shall, on such settlements, be so found due, at such times within ten years as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not be construed so as to produce or authorize any delay in the prosecution of said claims respectively other than as aforesaid, and each of said claims not so settled and disposed of as aforesaid shall be prosecuted and enforced according to existing obligations. In such settlements no allowance shall be made in respect of any matter occurring prior to such sales and transfers, nor otherwise, except such payments as may have been made in cash, and such credits for transportation as the general course of the business regulations of the Departments authorizes. And in any such settlements, the said Secretary and Attorney-General shall, as a condition thereof, take a full release from the other parties, respectively, of all claims and demands of every name and nature theretofore existing, if any such there be, against the United States.

Approved February 27, 1875.

Mr. OATES. This railroad company was one of the roads referred to in the act which accepted the terms of the act. In the report made by the board it is stated that the only companies which made application to have their debts adjusted and sold under the law which I have caused to be cited were the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Railroad Company, the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, the Selma, Rome and Dalton Company, and the Memphis and Little Rock Company. The report also shows that the board, "after a full consideration of the subject in all of its bearings, finds that the valuation of the property was intended and was considered at the time (of the sale) by those who made it to be a fair valuation; yet if measured by the value of the property, had it been sold for cash at the time, the board is brought to the conclusion and reports as its opinion that there was an overvaluation of nearly 25 per cent. in the appraised price."

And all this time, mark you, interest was running against the company upon the contract, which shows that it was equitable for the Government to make an abatement down to the plain rule of cash valuation of the property at the time of the sale. Now the reason why there was not an adjustment made by this board with this company is shown in the report, as follows:

No settlement has been made of the debt of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. The balance due the United States from that railroad company is now about $69,000; and a deduction of 25 per cent. from the appraised value of the property purchased by it, and an adjustment of the account on the basis of the settlement with other roads, would have brought the Government in debt to the company from $200,000 to $300,000.

Now mark you, the act I have caused to be read did not authorize the board, in the event that they found that the aggregate of payments and services rendered by any one of these companies would exceed the amount of the original debt when they applied the rule and made the deduction of 25 per cent., or whatever they agreed upon less than that, did not authorize them to draw their warrant upon the Treasury for settlement or payment to the company.

Now, the scope and object of the joint resolution is simply to authorize a board, composed of the same officers, to proceed with the settlement and adjustment with this company upon such basis as they think right and proper under this law.

I will state here there is some dispute about some of the claims of the company for services rendered; at least they have not been audited, have been accepted by the Government at the prices claimed by the railroad company.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him what kind of claims were those? What was the nature of the service the company rendered?

Mr. OATES. Carrying mails, the transportation of troops, &c.

Mr. SPRINGER. During the war?

Mr. OATES. Since the war. The rolling-stock was sold to the company after the war. It was mainly rolling-stock which had been captured by the Union forces during or at the end of the war, and for which the Government had no use, much of it being worn and not serviceable to the Government. They sold that rolling-stock to this and to quite a number of other railroad companies that were in so broken down a condition that they could not start business again with the resources at their disposal.

This Company got $500,000 worth of it, and agreed to pay interest at 6 per cent., I believe, till the money was paid, and all the carrying it did for the Government was to be credited or set off by the Government on that debt.

This particular company made many payments as well as rendered service to the Government; so that if this commission, composed of the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War, undertake to apply what the board considered was a just rule in this case, a deduction of 25 per cent. on the original amount of something over a half million dollars—if they apply that rule, the amount of payments made and the service rendered aggregate a larger sum than the company was due to the Government, and therefore upon that basis an amount would be due from the Government back to the company.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the point at issue here that the property which the Government sold to the railroad company was sold for too much?

Mr. OATES. That is what the Government itself determines. This act of 1875 created this board to pass upon the property sold to a number of railroads in the South; and when they examined the question, as appears from their report they said this property sold to the company was sold for 25 per cent. above its cash valuation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why did the company agree to buy it at that price?

Mr. OATES. They bought just after the war, in 1865 and 1866, when all prices were inflated, when cotton was worth 50 and 60 cents a pound, and all through the Southern States everything was proportionately high. This board, under the authority of this act of Congress, were authorized if they saw proper, if they deemed it just and equitable, to make a deduction not to exceed 25 per cent. from the amount of these sales.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the only point in this bill is that the railroad company agreed to give more for the property purchased from the Government than it was worth to the extent of 25 per cent.; and you desire another adjustment, by which the property will be estimated at 25 per cent. less than it was at the time the estimate was made. Is that it?

Mr. OATES. The board which was appointed by this act of Congress found that this company was entitled to a deduction of 25 per cent. But if the 25 per cent. should be deducted the amount of payments made and services rendered by this company aggregate a sum greater than it was due the Government after the 25 per cent. deduction was made. And therefore no settlement was reached by the board with this company.

The resolution before the committee is to renew that board, or rather to invest it with the power and authority to go on with their settlement. They are not concluded absolutely by the finding by the board heretofore that the rate of deduction should be 25 per cent. They could, I apprehend, reduce it so as to make it 15 or 10 per cent. if they saw proper. The object and purpose of the resolution is simply to authorize this board to go on, adjust the matter, and make a settlement with the company, and if it is found on equitable principles there is an overpayment after the rule of scaling is applied to it, they may have the power to draw their warrant on the Treasury for that difference in favor of the railroad company.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama one or two questions?

Mr. OATES. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do I understand the rule which the gentleman asks to apply in this case was applied to other railroad companies?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And you are asking no different rule now from what has been applied heretofore?

Mr. OATES. No, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Though the operation of the rule might result in a refund to this company; but it will be precisely the same rule as that on which adjustments were reached with other companies. Is that correct?

Mr. OATES. In answer to that inquiry, I will say, I hold in my hand a report which that commission made of its settlement with the Selma, Rome and Dalton road, under authority of that act, and with the Memphis and Little Rock Railroad Company. They reported after an examination against the deduction in behalf of the other one of the four which accepted the terms of the settlement.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the Government is already committed to that policy?

Mr. OATES. Oh, I think so, clearly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him how much the Government would probably be required to refund to this railroad company if the matter were adjusted upon the terms suggested in his resolution?

Mr. OATES. If all were to be allowed that the railroad company claims it would be a considerable sum; but that is left to the discretion of this board.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is rather indefinite. What would be that "considerable sum" in the gentleman's estimation?

Mr. OATES. I am unable to pass upon that question, because I have not examined it. That is a question for the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman allow me to read from the Quartermaster-General's report upon this very case?

Mr. OATES. In your own time; not in mine.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I was going to suggest——

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, having explained the object and purpose of the resolution, I now desire to reserve my time, and other gentlemen can take the floor in their own time.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from the report of Quartermaster-General Meigs in relation to this very case. What I read will be found at page 163 of the Quartermaster-General's report for the year ending June 30, 1885. He says:

> The case of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company is a peculiar one. It is not believed that this railroad company can properly be charged with an attempt to evade payment of its just obligations in this matter. In 1876 the railroad company had paid in cash and transportation services, according to the books of this office, the large sum of $535,159.07. It has made no cash payments since.

That is, it has made no cash payments since 1876.

Mr. FELTON. Do you know what amount it owed the Government?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will come to that in a moment. The Quartermaster-General says:

> It has made no cash payments since, but suspended the settlement and withheld the presentation of its Government transportation accounts and declined to pay over its postal earnings in liquidation. The reasons for this course are that by act of Congress of February 27, 1875, the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General were authorized to adjust and settle the indebtedness of a number of Southern railroads, including the Mobile and Ohio, and make such abatements as might be just, not exceeding 25 per cent. of the valuation of the property.

At that time the balance due from the railroad company, principal and interest, was about $69,000, and it was discovered that an adjustment of the accounts on the basis of the settlement under the law with the other railroads involved would bring the Government in debt to the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company between two and three hundred thousand dollars. The United States officers charged with the compromise doubted that the terms of the law authorized a settlement involving the payment of money to the company, and declined to make such a decision without further legislation, but made an offer to the company to relieve it of the balance claimed by the United States, which offer was refused.

Mr. FELTON. Then, if that is correct, for the property which the Government sold for $500,000 it would get about $200,000. That would be about what it would amount to, as I understand the case.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would result in this, that at that time, by this adjustment, the railroad company would have owed the Government $69,000, the balance having been paid in transportation service; but if this bill passes, the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General will be authorized to adjust the matter upon the basis upon which the accounts of these other companies were adjusted, and such an adjustment, the Quartermaster-General says, would result in this company obtaining a verdict against the United States to the amount of from two hundred thousand to three hundred thousand dollars. So that if this bill passes, the transaction of the Government with this railroad company will turn out to have been a very unfortunate one, because, while the Government sold this company property worth $500,000 and has had a running account with the company for transportation services since that time, it will now have to pay them two hundred or three hundred thousand dollars in order to get out of the trade.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does not the gentleman understand that there is no new rule being applied to this company different from the rule that was applied in 1875 to the other companies? Is not that true?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Quartermaster-General says it was discovered that on the basis of the adjustment made with the other railroad companies the Government would owe this company between two hundred thousand and three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. OATES. Suppose the debt had not existed, and this amount was earned in transportation by this company, would not the Government have had to pay the company that much money?

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is one of the companies included in the original act.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this resolution should be amended so as to authorize the Secretary of War to give a receipt in full to this railroad company; in other words, to remit the payment of the $69,000 which that railroad company now under the law owes to the United States.

It was not contemplated by Congress when the bill to which the gentleman refers was passed that it would result in bringing the Government in debt to any of these railroad companies, because there was no provision by which payment was to be made by the Government if the amount of the set-off proved by the railroad company should exceed the amount of its indebtedness. It was not contemplated by Congress that we were opening up a means to relieve railroad companies by enabling them to get a judgment against the United States in large sums of money. The Quartermaster-General himself concedes that it was not contemplated the adjustment should result in bringing the Government in debt to any of the railroad companies, but simply that the indebtedness of the companies, so far as justice might require, should be canceled.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it not true that this company would have had the whole benefit of the adjustment but for the fact that it paid its dues to the Government regularly and fully? Does not the fact that there is now a balance due by the Government to this company result from its having met its obligations fully and frankly? If so, ought the company to suffer for this?

Mr. SPRINGER. The company is not suffering.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the company had not paid its debts would it not have obtained the benefit of not paying?

Mr. SPRINGER. That is begging the question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is what I want to do. I want to "beg the question" of my friend from Illinois. I want him to answer.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer. Congress assumed that the Government had estimated at too high a figure some of the property sold to these railroad companies, and for the purpose of enabling that question to be thoroughly adjusted provision was made for appointing a commission. The result of the examination, however, in the case of this railroad company was the discovery of the fact that, if the rule were applied to this company as it was to all others, the Government would be indebted to the company in the sum of from $200,000 to $300,000. It was believed by the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War that Congress intended not to inaugurate a proceeding which would result in a judgment against the Government, but merely to enable these railroad companies to cancel their indebtedness; and I think if this company succeeds in canceling its indebtedness to the Government and holding the Government to its original bargain on the other matters it will have substantial equity done to it.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I would like the gentleman to explain why there should be a difference made between this company and other companies that were allowed to settle on the same basis?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, it does not follow because we allow relief to certain railroad companies on account of transportation done for the Government that we are to grant equity to other railroad companies. The relief was granted in these cases because the Government was holding liabilities against insolvent corporations; and we desired to relieve them of that indebtedness. But here was a railroad company that was able to pay; and we asked this company simply to keep the contract which had been made in good faith between it and the Government.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman falls into error in reference to a matter of fact. These were not insolvent railroad companies, because they were required to secure these debts to the Government, and had done so.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; not on that account; I did not so state. But the gentleman said they were embarrassed, and unable to meet their indebtedness.

Mr. OATES. At the close of the war they were unable to go into business until they obtained this rolling-stock, until they bought it at whatever the Government asked for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. They passed their dividends and failed to meet the interest on their bonds, did they not?

Mr. OATES. I do not suppose they paid any dividends until their debts were paid.

Mr. SPRINGER. They were practically insolvent at the close of the war.

Mr. OATES. There were four companies that accepted the terms of this act and applied for an adjustment of their accounts. This board found that one of these companies was not entitled to any deductions, while three others, including this company, were so entitled. With two of these companies a settlement was effected, but no settlement was effected with this company, because upon taking into account the payments made and the service rendered the Government would be in debt to the corporation. The board had no power to make settlement in cases of this kind and to draw their warrant on the Treasury for the difference.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, when the act of 1875 was passed it proceeded upon the assumption that the railroad corporations named were not able to pay their full indebtedness to the Government. I think the debates had at that time on this question will show very clearly that the bill was put substantially on this footing: That these corporations had bought a large amount of property belonging to the Government—rolling-stock and the like—and were not able to pay for it; that they were greatly embarrassed. This turned out to be true as to all these corporations, if I understand the matter correctly, except the Mobile and Ohio. This corporation had done a large amount of transportation for the Government, and, if my memory is correct, a large portion of their payment on account of the property they purchased was made in the form of transportation. It was admitted when this subject was discussed that the property had been sold at the then current prices; and the rates of transportation, by which the purchases were largely paid, were correspondingly high. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad, on account of its location with reference to the operations of the Government during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868, was able to make very heavy payments in the form of transportation. There was another element which was taken into account; though not discussed, it certainly was taken into account by members of the House; and that was, that while the same was true in some degree as to one of the other corporations—it may be, too——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is the gentleman discussing the elements that entered into the act of 1875?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I am saying that this matter entered into the question at that time, although I admit no attempt was made to strike out the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company. It was a road highly favored by the Government. It was in the main constructed upon the credit of the land grant made in 1852. I believe I am correct as to the date. It was made at the same time as the land grant to the Illinois Central. If I understand the facts correctly, both of these roads, being a continuation of a system, were built upon the basis of the land grants made by the Government.

Considerable grants of public lands were made by the Government. I do not pretend that entered into the case at all, but I know it was thought there should be distinction between the Mobile and Ohio and other corporations. While it was manifest as to the others, it was not manifest as to this one. I am quite confident Congress did not dream we were entering into an arrangement by which money should be taken from the public Treasury. I think I can say with safety from the history of the act of 1875 that act would not have been passed and a liberal policy adopted upon the idea money was to come out of the Treasury. It was supposed that this corporation owed the Government considerably more after the deduction of 25 per cent. It turns out in this particular case, in consequence of the large transactions the Government had on these roads in the adjustment, allowing the 25 per cent. on property purchased at its current value, the road became heavily in debt.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do I understand the gentleman in citing the act of 1875 and the discussion which led to its enactment as between the Government and these railroad companies to say it was the intention of the lawmakers, where the balance was in favor of the Government, the Government would take that balance, and where the balance was against the Government the Government would not consent to refund it?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is impossible to tell what entered into the first grant.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is the gentleman's position.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; that is not my position.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is my understanding of the rule of the lawmakers, according to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not the view I was seeking to express. I may have been unfortunate in expressing my idea. The idea I sought to express was that it was understood these were insolvent institutions. That was the general idea. The Government exercised a magnanimous policy toward them. It was not alleged, and it can not be alleged now, this property was all consumed. It was sold at the current value. The Government necessarily stocked these roads when they fell into its hands, not only with new iron but with rolling-stock. It was not understood we were selling that property, but it was undersood the Government to encourage the South should adopt a liberal policy in view of the large indebtedness of these corporations to the United States. Therefore Congress allowed in the act of 1875 a deduction not exceeding 25 per cent.

And gentlemen will hardly be surprised, I imagine, that the maximum sum of the deduction named by Congress has been allowed in this case. The deductions are always to the full extent of the privilege; and it seems to be generally understood that the full measure will be accorded in every case if it is against the Government. Executive officers and others authorized to execute the powers of Congress in making such awards seem to consider that every proposition unfavorable to the Government shall be carried to its fullest and final extent. So with this case, the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War adopted the maximum sum named as the amount to be deducted from the obligations of these corporations. They allowed every cent that the law permitted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the very fact that Congress provided for fixing a maximum sum, ought to have conveyed to the board at least the idea that it did not necessarily follow that it should make the whole deduction, or that these roads should all be placed upon the same footing. There were certain circumstances which might materially modify such award. If the Government had been throwing a large amount of its transportation and large business upon some one of the roads, and not upon another, giving a particular road an advantage over the others, that is a question that might have been taken into account. If in former years the Government had by its assistance built one road and not the other, that might also have been taken into account; and it may be said the inability of one to pay and of the other to meet its obligations might have been taken into account.

This, however, was an act of magnanimity on the part of the Government, and the question is how far an act of mere magnanimity toward these bankrupt corporations to enable them to get out of their indebtedness to the Government and proceed successfully with their business shall compel us now, in the interest of a corporation, which as it turns out was not insolvent, to extend this beneficence on the part of the Government.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OATES. I wish to ask if this had any effect upon an insolvent corporation, that they paid a part of the indebtedness? Would it make any difference as against them?

Mr. HOLMAN. Unquestionably; if it had been an insolvent corporation, and it could not have carried on its business without liberal aid on the part of the Government, it would seem to be some excuse for this line of policy——

Mr. OATES. It had been insolvent and made the payments by service upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman knows this was a mere act of magnanimity on the part of the Government. It was not a matter of contract. We were not doing a mere act of equity to these corporations by reducing the amount of the indebtedness 25 per cent., but it was an act of benevolence, a beneficence on the part of the Government under peculiar circumstances.

Mr. REED, of Maine. For which you hold we had better be sorry. [Laughter.] Is that it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this corporation was enjoying no further right than others before Congress. You compromise with the bankrupt debtor for two reasons: First, to do the best you can for yourself; and second, to do the best you can for him; but it does not follow that this act of magnanimity of the Government toward one of the roads should be taken as a basis for according it to another under different circumstances and conditions. I do not think the Moblie and Ohio Railroad Company can with fairness ask that we should pay them Government money out of the Treasury. Let us look at the matter for a moment and meet the case squarely. I ask the gentleman's attention now. He will not say that we sold that property too high or that they agreed to pay more than it was worth to begin with.

Mr. OATES. Will you allow another question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman now allow an interruption?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. An answer to the gentleman from Indiana on this point will be found in the report of the board in these words:

The board, after full consideration of the subject in all of its bearings, think that the valuation of the property was intended, and so considered at the time by those who made it, to be a fair valuation; yet if measured by the value of the property, had it been sold for cash at the time, the board is brought to the conclusion, and reports as its opinion, that there was an overvaluation of fully 25 per cent. in the appraised price.

That shows whether or not the property was sold them too high.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; that is to say, an overvaluation on the property sold on the terms on which it was sold if cash was to be paid; but it should be remembered that it was to be paid for by transportation and was not an actual cash sale.

Mr. OATES. And yet the roads have been paying interest upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they were not compelled to pay cash; and a large amount of transportation was put into their hands by the Government for which a high price was paid. That question no doubt entered into the purchase of the property and also into the value of it.

Mr. OATES. Would not the Government have paid the company in money for this transportation if it had not taken this property?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, but not at such high rates; and I think the basis on which the negotiations for that transportation was conducted would have been very different had there not been this sale of property which was to be paid for in transportation as a sort of set-off.

But if the proposition is true, as stated in the report, that it was a fair valuation of the property, then is it proper that a particular corporation which has grown up and whose wealth comes out of the public wealth of the country shall come now and ask us to pay them back out of the money in the Treasury two or three hundred thousand dollars? I am willing to treat the corporations with entire fairness and equity. It bought our property and I think it ought to be paid for, notwithstanding certain bankrupt corporations obtained better terms from the Government.

I submit the following amendment. I believe it is in order now to offer amendments. For myself I have no objection to a further examination of the subject; but I am anxious when Congress acts upon the subject that it shall act with a full knowledge of the situation. Therefore I move to strike out all of this bill after the words "twenty-five," in the tenth line, down to the end of the bill, and insert "and make report thereon to Congress."

I will send up the words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment will be considered as pending, general debate not having yet closed on the bill. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. At the close of the war the United States Government found itself in the South in possession of a very large amount of material. The United States Government did not want it and the railroads did, and accordingly they were permitted, on certain terms, to make purchases of this material. Among other railroads that purchased were four that were named in the original act. They came before Congress and said that the price was too high, and asked for an adjustment by a board of United States officers. That adjustment was made under a law passed by Congress. It was discovered that the other three railroads, by reason of not having paid as they went the price which the Government demanded, could have their accounts canceled; but one railroad, the Mobile and Ohio, had right along paid cash for what it had received, and the board of adjustment decided that they could not bring the United States Government into debt and pay money out of the Treasury. So that the result was that this road, by reason of faithfully fulfilling its obligations, lost a large sum of money, and it comes before Congress to-day asking that it shall be put in the same condition as those railroads which had not fulfilled their obligations.

Now, can there be any objection to that on the scorce of honesty and decent treatment? On the question of adjustment the Congress of the United States has passed. Upon the details of its execution it is now called upon to pass. In other words, we have paid a similar sum of money to railroads that did not fulfill their obligations. The gentleman from Indiana now asks us to refuse to do the same thing to a railroad which in good faith did fulfill its obligations. It may be that it was an act of magnanimity on the part of Congress to pass the original act, but I think the whole world will agree that it would not be an act of magnanimity to do as the gentleman from Indiana desires shall be done.

The only reason I have felt any interest in this matter was because I had occasion once to investigate this whole question of rebates on purchases by Southern railroads. I am perfectly frank to say that I opposed and assisted in defeating a re-examination on the part of other roads, because I believed a contract once made ought to be regarded as consummated and ended; and I do not believe the original bill ought to have passed. Congress proclaimed its will with regard to those roads; and having done so, I think it is very poor business for Congress to refuse the same measure of relief which it granted to roads that did not do what they ought to have done to a road which did.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] seems to think, and in fact he says, that this act of 1875 was passed out of a spirit of magnanimity toward insolvent railroad companies, and that it was so passed on account of their being insolvent and unable to pay the debts they owed the Government. Now, sir, that was not the object of the law, and that was not the origin of the law. This is apparent by reference to the provisions of the law itself.

This act of 1875 provides:

That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General are hereby authorized and empowered jointly to adjust and settle the claims of the United States against—

Ten railroads that are named in the act. How?

By making such abatement in the amount of such claims, respectively, as shall be deemed just in respect of an overvaluation—

Not on account of their insolvency, but—in respect of an overvaluation of the property sold, the abatement not to exceed 25 per cent. of the valuation of the property in each case, as made under the authority of the War Department on the occasion of such sales.

Mr. HOLMAN. The motive of the whole transaction was to relieve these corporations.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. We have to construe a law by its terms as we find them, and not by what the gentleman may have said in the Congress which passed it, or what any one else in that Congress may have said. Here is the law. It is not surprising it was found in the year 1875 that the property sold in 1865 had been sold at excessively high prices. In 1865, cotton that now sells for 9 cents a pound sold for 50 and 60 cents a pound; iron that is now but a few dollars a ton sold for eighty and one hundred dollars a ton, and I believe for more. All prices were inflated in that year, and this railroad property was no exception. It was sold under executive orders of the Government. The Government had no use for it, as the gentleman from Maine correctly said. The railroads had use for it. Executive orders were made for its sale to these railroads. Ten of them bought this property, consisting of rolling-stock and railway material; millions of this property were sold. The Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company bought at this sale to the extent of $500,000 and a little more, and gave its bonds with 7.3 per cent. interest, with security.

After giving those bonds and getting the property the company commenced to make payment on its obligation by carrying the mails and transporting troops and by making large cash payments. That is a fact in this case. But it was found this sale was very onerous on those companies. Whether they were solvent or insolvent, they found it was a great hardship, and they appealed to Congress for relief; and here is the act granting relief, declaring that the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General should make settlement with these roads and an abatement in this overvaluation on such terms as would be deemed just, not exceeding 25 per cent. After that law was passed creating this board four of these companies applied to get the benefit of it, namely, the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad in Alabama, the Memphis and Little Rock Company, the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Company in Virginia, and the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

The board proceeded to settle with these companies. As to the Alexandria, Loudoun and Hampshire Company, they found that the property which that company had bought was not bought at too high a valuation, because the same material had been sold at auction for the same prices that were paid by that company. For that reason the board refused to make any abatement as to that company. As to the Selma, Rome and Dalton Company and the Memphis and Little Rock Company, the board found that they were entitled to this abatement of 25 per cent., and as those companies had failed to pay their debts to the Government and were then largely in arrears, after deducting the 25 per cent. there was still something coming to the Government, and settlements were made with those companies upon that basis.

But as to this Mobile and Ohio Company, it was found that they had bought this property at excessive prices, at an overvaluation, and therefore the board came to the conclusion that they were justly and equitably entitled to this 25 per cent. deduction. Yet they could not make a settlement with them. Why? Because they reported that this company alone, of all the ten, had met its obligations and paid them to such an extent that it was very slightly indebted to the Government, the balance due amounting to $69,000; and consequently if the same rule were applied in this case as in the others it would bring the Government in debt to the company. And the board reported that under this law they were not authorized to pay out any money. That was their award and that was their report. Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, for the consideration of this committee, whether this company, which was the only one that had met its obligations to the Government, ought to be denied the benefits of that law? Why, sir, that would be to reward those companies that were delinquent and to punish the only one that was diligent in meeting its obligations.

This joint resolution is designed to carry out the spirit and the intent of the act of 1875. The intention of that act clearly is and was to apply the same rule of settlement to all these companies, and that all should get the benefit of it. Certainly this Mobile and Ohio Company, which was diligent in performing its obligations to the Government, ought not to be denied the benefits of that act. All the company asks is to be put upon an equal footing with the others, to be accorded the benefit of the same law, and to have a settlement like that which has been made with them. It is true, and it is well known, that this Government can deny the company this relief. It is powerful enough to do it. It is sovereign, and can deny this; but, Mr. Chairman, "it is excellent to have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant."

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Last year, I believe, a judgment was rendered against this corporation in behalf of the Government for something over a hundred thousand dollars, and it turns out that from the beginning the corporation was insolvent. This act to which the gentleman refers did not contemplate the payment by the Government of any money to any of these corporations, for, of course, if any such thing was in contemplation some provision would have been made for it. Now, would it not be acting in a very liberal manner if the Government should release this corporation from the payment of that debt of over a hundred thousand dollars, and would not that be enough for the Government to do without going on and paying the company two or three hundred thousand dollars in addition?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it is not a fact that any judgment was rendered against the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company in favor of the Government. Why should this Government seek in this case to avoid the plain provisions of a law of its own enactment? Why should the line be drawn at the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company when the Government has settled on these terms and made these abatements in the cases of these other companies? This is not a new case in Congress. It was reported upon favorably by the Judiciary Committee in the last House; it was reported favorably in the Senate in two Congresses, and I believe it is a fact that it was passed by the Senate at one time. Repeatedly the Quartermaster-General has reported to Congress that the claim of this company is a just one and ought to be paid, and has appealed to Congress to pass such legislation as is embodied in this joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I believe I was mistaken as to the rendition of a judgment against the company. There was no judgment, but the amount due the Government on the original contract on the 30th of last June was $114,397.74.

Now, if according to the spirit of the original act, which does not contemplate paying any money, a rebate or deduction be made on the price which the railroad company paid to the Government for this property, will not the Government be acting liberally toward a solvent corporation whose wealth has grown largely out of a grant made by Congress years ago if we release it from payment of this claim of $114,000? Would not this be quite magnanimous to a solvent corporation?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. The gentleman from Indiana at one time represents this company as being insolvent and at another as being solvent. The balance due from this company is not $114,000, but $69,000. The object of this resolution is not to appeal to the magnanimity of the Government. The company comes here and asks simply that the law be carried out in its case as it was carried out in the others. It does not appeal for charity; it asks for equity and justice. That is the whole case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the fifth line of the first section strike out the word "finally."

Strike out all of the first section after "1875," in line 10, and insert "and make report thereof, with a full statement of the value of the property sold by the United States to said company, to Congress."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the Clerk report the first section as it will read if these amendments be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, jointly, to adjust and settle the accounts of the United States with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company for property received from the United States in the years 1865 and 1866, as provided for in the act of Congress approved February 27, 1875, and make report thereof, with a full statement of the value of the property sold by the United States to said company, to Congress.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the only effect of the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is to strike out the word "finally," before the word "settle," in the fifth line, so as to leave this matter still open. I trust that amendment will not be adopted, for this question ought to be finally settled; and certainly the Congress of the United States can trust two of its highest officers to make this adjustment and settlement according to the law which it enacts. As to the other branch of the amendment, the latter part of it, it is objectionable for two reasons. In the first place, it contemplates making this board composed of the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General a mere court of inquiry to report the valuation of the property to Congress, leaving the question still open in accordance with the idea of the first amendment. In the second place, to require these officers to report back to Congress is entirely unnecessary, since the act of 1875 under which the board is created requires a report of its action. If the gentleman will modify his amendment so as merely to strike out of the first section all after "1875," allowing this board to proceed in the execution of the law of 1875, I shall be willing, so far as I am concerned, to accept that amendment. The effect of the amendment in this form would be to strike out the words "and upon the same basis of settlement and upon the same terms and conditions as was done with other companies included in said act."

This would leave the question open for the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General to investigate and ascertain whether the estimates of the value of this property were correctly made or not. To such a proposition I have no objection. All that we desire is that equity may be done under the law to this corporation and that this long-standing account may be settled. With this amendment it seems to me there could be no reasonable objection made to the joint resolution. If the gentleman from Indiana will not accept my amendment as a modification of his I will move as a substitute for his amendment to strike out all after "1875." The whole effect of the resolution will then be to refer this question under the act of 1875 to this board, which can institute a new inquiry into the value of the property sold by the Government to this corporation. If the present Attorney-General and Secretary of War should find that the board heretofore organized erred in the amount of deduction allowed—25 per cent.—let them place it where they may think equitable. If they find that no deduction is to be made, then the Government is not injured to the extent of a dollar. If they find that the $69,000 which the Government claims is still owing from this corporation upon its contract ought to be remitted—whatever this board may find, I venture to affirm, the corporation will most cheerfully conform to the finding. But it seems to me no valid objection can be urged against the resolution with the amendment I suggest. It proposes nothing but to do pure and simple equity between the Government and a corporation with which it is dealing. Ought any Representative on this floor to ask any more?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. HOLMAN. His amendment proposes to strike out a portion of the same matter I propose to strike out. Of course he has a right to perfect the original text before my amendment is voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, after the word "seventy-five," in line 10, strike out "and upon the same basis of settlement, and upon the same terms and conditions as was done with other companies included in said act."

Mr. OATES. I hope that will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the first amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the first amendment for the present and offer the second only.

I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the only effect of my pending amendment is, if adopted, that instead of allowing a payment of the sum found due upon the award or settlement which may be made by the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War, the award, whatever it may be, shall be reported to Congress; and that will be carrying out the spirit of the act of 1875, for that, I claim, did not contemplate the payment of any money. It was claimed that no such purpose was in view, so that this is merely a supplemental act, not merely carrying out the provisions of the act of 1875, but largely extending that act unless the amendments which I have suggested be adopted.

This contemplates the payment of a large sum of money, while the act of 1875 did not contemplate any payments.

Mr. OATES. My friend from Indiana is willing to trust the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War to settle, provided that they do not have any money to pay. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, because I know then exactly what we are doing; I know then you are giving this corporation $114,000, and I repeat we know what we are doing; but when you confer not only the power to release the corporation from about $114,000, but also the power to make a raid upon the Treasury to the extent of two or three hundred thousand dollars more, I am unwilling to place that power in the hands of anybody except the Congress of the United States, because Congress alone is authorized to appropriate money out of the public Treasury. That is the objection I have to the legislation proposed by this bill as it stands, and therefore insist upon my amendment.

From necessity, in some instances, we have been making permanent appropriations; but seldom indeed do we allow an executive officer of the Government to make a drain upon the Treasury, as proposed here, and almost without limitation or restriction. When it is done it is always with restrictions; whereas in this bill there is no restraint except that growing out of the amount of property originally sold.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the proper amount can be ascertained by this commission, is the gentleman willing that it shall be paid or is it to come back and be again discussed here?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to know what, if any, deductions are to be made, and not act blindly on a case of this importance. I want to know the basis on which the settlement is to be made. We are calling upon officers of the Government to ascertain what the property is worth, and report that fact to Congress for its action. They make that award and Congress passes whatever it regards as proper. We have a proposition here to release them on certain conditions from the obligation which they are under to the Government to an extent not perhaps exceeding 25 per cent.; but I want to know the basis of that settlement. Under the act of 1875 we only conferred upon them the authority to make deductions in the amount of the indebtedness to the United States. Here we go far beyond that, not only allowing them to make a rebate of the indebtedness, but to pay hundreds of thousands out of the public Treasury. For one, I repeat, I am not willing to legislate in that blindfold manner.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Did you not vote for the act of 1875, which allowed the same mode to be pursued?

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of 1875 did not allow the same mode to be pursued; and whether I voted for it or not I am not now able to recollect, but I think not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word. I have endeavored to go back to the proceedings of the Forty-third Congress for the purpose of getting the report upon which this bill was based in that Congress, but I am not able, owing to the bad indexing of these volumes, to get any trace of this particular bill. But I have found the bill which passed at the same session, or was then pending, which gave substantially the same facts—a bill entitled "A bill for the collection of debts due from certain railroad companies," and which was reported for that purpose; that is, to enable the Government to collect its debts against certain railroad companies. The report in that case, and the exhibits attached, show that the whole subject now before Congress was before it at that time. Exhibit A, for instance, contains a statement of the indebtedness of the Southern railroad companies to January 1, 1867, among which I see the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company, showing an indebtedness of $505,000 all the way through. But there is a remarkable statement appended that possibly the transportation service will pay the debt within one year.

Now, the roads asked relief, and the relief that was claimed under that report, which was submitted to the House by Hon. Benjamin F. Butler in a previous Congress and adopted in that, asked that the suits against certain railroads which are insolvent be dismissed and the matters arbitrated, in order, by so doing, that the companies could meet their indebtedness to the United States.

Mr. OATES. Is not the gentleman willing to trust the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General to make an award, when it is in their discretion to allow 25 per cent. or less or nothing?

Mr. SPRINGER. We are exercising discretion now. Congress is called upon to exercise its discretion, and it is for us to determine whether a bill originally brought forward in the interest of railroad companies to enable them to pay in an easier way their indebtedness to the Government should be turned upon the Government and made the means of mulcting the Government in large sums of money to pay the railroad companies.

Mr. OATES. This resolution is merely to carry out the law which is on the statute-book.

Mr. SPRINGER. A law passed for the benefit and relief of the railroad companies. This is a bill to give a judgment against the United States for a large sum.

Mr. OATES. Not at all. It is discretionary with that board composed of the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War to allow 25 per cent. or any less sum—whatever they think right and just.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will ask the gentleman is it wise legislation to confer such extraordinary discretion on two officers of the Government? In what case have we done it before?

Mr. OATES. It might have been well to have addressed that question to members at the time of the passage of the original act, but it is not applicable here.

Mr. SPRINGER. This discretion is like the discretion conferred on the President when he is authorized to name some person, and put him on the retired-list. It is made subject to his discretion, but it is accompanied by a legislative recommendation, and the President acts in accordance with that. And this bill is intended for that purpose and will have that effect. I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the word "1875," in line 10, and insert:
"And make report thereof, with a full statement of the value of the property sold by the United States to said company, to Congress."

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 16, noes 77.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted, and I do not think there is a quorum present. In order that other business on the Calendar may be proceeded with I make this suggestion: I am willing this matter should go to the House for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

Mr. OATES. Let it be on the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to have it on the amendment.

Mr. OATES. I do not think I can agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. What motion does the gentleman from Indiana submit?

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted, but I am willing the bill should go to the House with an understanding that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

Mr. OATES. If it is agreed that the bill shall be reported favorably with the understanding that there shall be a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment, I will not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. OATES. I propose to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. The form in which the bill should be reported to the House is quite unimportant. I do not think I shall object to the bill going to the House in that form with the understanding the yeas and nays shall be ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote be had in the House on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to ask the Chair does unanimous consent in the Committee of the Whole bind the House to a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has always been held that in honor it does.

Mr. OATES. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] not to object.

Mr. DUNHAM. The Chair has not answered my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the rule the agreement in committee will not bind the House. The House can refuse the yeas and nays or it can carry out the agreement made in the committee, as the House sees fit.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have never known a case where such an agreement had been made that there was any objection to carrying it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply speaks of the power of the committee to bind the House. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent?

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, and with the understanding that there shall be in the House a yea-and-nay vote on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment.

E. ETHERIDGE AND W. B. STOKES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes, reported by Mr. SHAW from the Committee on Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes, sureties upon the official bond of James T. T. Carter, given as security for the faithful performance by said Carter of his duties as secretary of the Territory of Arizona, and dated June 13, 1866, be, and said sureties are hereby, released and discharged of and from all and every obligation and liability whatsoever on account of said bond or any breach thereof.

Mr. GLASS. I will state for the information of the committee that this bill was considered by the Senate committee; that a favorable report was made upon it, and that after discussion it was passed by the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. It is before this committee now upon the unanimous report of the committee of this House that considered it. I think there will be no objection to it, and if there is not, I ask that it be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. I reserve my time, if any one wants to speak on the other side.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH C. IRWIN & CO. AND OTHERS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment. I wish to call up by unanimous consent a bill that passed the Senate in the last Congress—a bill to refer certain claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 1357) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims be taken up out of its regular order and considered by the committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claims of Joseph C. Irwin & Co. and C. A. Perry & Co., for property taken and impressed into the service of the United States, in the year 1857, by orders of Col. Albert Sidney Johnston, in command of the Utah expedition, be, and the same are hereby, referred, with all the papers relating thereto, to the Court of Claims, for adjudication on the proofs heretofore presented and such other proofs as may be adduced.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think there ought to be any objection to this bill, except that the House is not aware of the character of the proofs mentioned. Is it legal proof?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The court is to pass upon the claim—to render a judgment upon the claim. This is the same bill that passed the Senate at the last Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill speaks of "proofs." Now, if that be legal evidence——

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. It will not bind the court if it be not legal evidence.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Well, I have no objection to an amendment which will meet the gentleman's objection.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish the gentleman would state why this case cannot go in under the Bowman act.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Because of the statute of limitations.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not wish to make any objection, but I supposed we were going to have a bill that would send all these claims for adjudication.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the bill be amended by adding the words "provided they are competent evidence."

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I do not object to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEVI JONES.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4629) for the relief of Levi Jones.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I have a bill or two that I should like to have considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain more than one request at a time. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration bills upon the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

CHANGE OF RANK.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 37) to change the rank of an officer on the retired-list of the Army,

The SPEAKER. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an adverse recommendation. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] has charge of that bill, and I observe that he is not in his seat at this moment.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that by unanimous consent this bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. If there be no motion to postpone the question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until next Friday.

Mr. PRICE. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion has precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] to lay the bill on the table.

The House divided; and the Speaker stated that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 21.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] to act as tellers.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally until next Friday.

The SPEAKER. That request has been made and objected to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The motion to postpone until next Friday is now pending, and will be voted upon as soon as the motion to lay on the table is disposed of, unless that motion carries.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported 45 in the affirmative.

Before the count was completed,

Mr. BRAGG said: Mr. Speaker, by consent, if unanimous consent can be obtained, this bill will go over, to be voted upon in the House on Monday next immediately after the reading of the Journal. With that understanding I withdraw the call for a quorum.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The tellers will resume their places. No quorum has yet voted.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

EMERSON ETHERIDGE AND WILLIAM B. STOKES.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS], who has charge of the bill for the relief of Emerson Etheridge, states that a court is to meet soon in Tennessee, which is about to render judgment for the amount due to the Government which this bill proposes to release. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken up and put upon its passage.

Mr. RANDALL. Is this Mr. Etheridge the gentleman who was formerly a member of this House?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. And Clerk of the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. And Clerk of the House. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now put upon its passage.

There was no objection.

The bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes was ordered to a third reading; and was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 1357, authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims, be taken up and passed, it having been favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMALLS. I object.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent——

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS] withdraws his objection to my request.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded by several gentlemen.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROGERS. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. No quorum has yet voted on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE]. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] moves to adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. An adjournment will cut off the evening session for pension business. Let us take a recess.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to; there being—ayes 45, noes 58.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, if the House now takes a recess will any business be considered at the evening session except pension cases under the special order?

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the only business will be pension bills and bills removing political disabilities.

The motion of Mr. DUNHAM was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills under the special order for Friday evening sessions.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration, under the special order of the House, of pension bills and bills for the removal of political disabilities.

MARIA K. RITTER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5693) for the relief of Maria K. Ritter.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that this bill and House bill 4097, next on the Calendar, granting a pension to William J. Owings, be laid aside informally, retaining their places on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the order will be made.

There was no objection.

MARY HOWARD FARQUHAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1201) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Howard Farquhar, widow of the late Maj. and Bvt. Lieut. Col. Francis V. Farquhar, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and daughter of the late Maj. Gen. Alpheus S. Williams, United States Volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty," so as to provide for a pension of $40 a month.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "forty" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, let it be "forty."

Mr. MORRILL. Thirty dollars is the same amount that other widows of officers of similar rank now receive.

Mr. STRAIT. I hope the amendment of the committee proposing $40 will be agreed to.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1201) granting a pension to Mary H. Farquhar, after duly considering the same, report it back, and recommend its passage with the following amendment: Strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "forty."

In consideration of the long and faithful services of Maj. and Bvt. Lieut. Col. Francis M. Farquhar, and the necessities of his widow, Mary H. Farquhar, your committee believe that a pension of $40 per month is not excessive under the circumstances, and respectfully recommend that it be granted.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee recommend a pension of $40.

Mr. MORRILL. But they do not state any special circumstance entitling this case to be made an exception to the general rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this lady receives $30 now.

Mr. MORRILL. If she gets $30, she gets all she is entitled to under the law.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a matter of opinion. I hope there will be no adverse action on this bill to-night, in the absence of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAYBURY] who has the matter in charge.

Mr. MORRILL. I am willing that the bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

LOUISA C. BEEZELEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa C. Beezeley, widow of Nathaniel Beezely, deceased, formerly a member of Company B, Second Indiana Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN M'GOWAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4032) granting a pension to John McGowan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John McGowan, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

NELSON MONROE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6088) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Monroe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Nelson Monroe, and pay him at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty," so as to provide for a pension of $40 per month.

Mr. BRAGG. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. SCOTT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the House bill 6088, submit the following report:

Nelson Monroe was first sergeant of Company H, One hundred and fifty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. He is borne upon the pension-roll (certificate 35110) at the rate of $30 per month, for paralysis of left side, bladder, and rectum, the result of typhoid fever, contracted in the service and line of duty.

Dr. James Cummisky, examining surgeon, Philadelphia, in 1869, finds:

"Claimant suffering from complete paralysis of left lower limb and partial paralysis of left upper limb, result of typhoid fever. He is necessarily obliged to use crutches in moving about. The lower limb possesses no power whatever, and it were better for him if it were amputated, as it is very much in the way. The left arm and hand have some power, though not sufficient to depend on for manual labor."

The Boston board of examining surgeons, 1883, find:

"Paralysis, as above described, and also hemorrhoids, consequent upon same disease, which bleed to such an extent that he is obliged to wear a diaper all the time. We find them large and protruding, bleeding and ulcerated."

Dr. Wilson Jewell, examining surgeon, Philadelphia, says:

"His disease was lingering and finally terminating in paralysis of left side, as also of the bladder and rectum. Not likely to recover. He is unable to pursue any business."

Claimant has also varicose veins of right leg, which, together with his paralysis of left side, disable him in such a degree that, while in a measure he is able to attend to himself, renders him entirely disabled to earn anything for the support of himself and his family; and, while he is not in that state of complete helplessness requiring the constant care and attendance of another person which would entitle him to $50 per month, your committee feel that he is entitled to an increase upon the amount now received by him. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill with the following amendment:

Strike out the word "fifty," in the fifth line of the bill, and substitute therefor the word "forty."

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES SCHULER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7298) for the relief of Charles Schuler; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles Schuler, late a private in Company K, Fourth Minnesota Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RANDOLPH SEAMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7300) for the relief of Randolph Seaman; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Randolph Seaman, late a private in Company H, Sixth Minnesota Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CALLIE WEST.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7222) granting a pension to Callie West; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Callie West, widow of Burris C. West, late of Company G, Sixty-sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ISAAC N. HAWKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7519) to increase the pension of Isaac N. Hawkins; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension now granted to Isaac N. Hawkins, late a captain in the Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, be increased to $40 per month from and after the passage of this act, said pension to be in lieu of the one he is now receiving.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-six."

Mr. PETERS. I had the honor of being the adjutant in the command in which this officer served, and was in the battle in front of Atlanta in which he was wounded. He went out on the skirmish line, and in a few minutes afterward came out, having received a very serious wound.

In the first place, I call attention to the photograph which will be found in the report made by the committee; and, in the second place, I will say it is one of those instances where if the arm had been amputated at the shoulder-joint he would have received $37.50, but as the arm was not amputated, although almost entirely useless, he could only receive under the law $24 a month. He was a brave and gallant young officer, about my own age at that time. His entire life was ruined by this wound, and he deserves the increased pension which the bill proposes to give him.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARGARET COLBATH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1585) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Colbath; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Colbath, widow of John D. Colbath, late a private in Company B, Eighth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH A. VAUGHN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1592) for the relief of Sarah A. Vaughn; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sarah A. Vaughn, dependent mother of Delos A. Graves, late of the Seventeenth Independent Battery Light Artillery, New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMANTHA A. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6452) granting a pension to Samantha A. Smith; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Samantha A. Smith, widow of Lewis Y. Smith, late of Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass

MRS. SARAH CASTEEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6795) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah Casteel; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Mrs. Sarah Casteel, widow of Abram C. Casteel, late a private in Company F, Twelfth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARTIN J. REYNOLDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6453) granting a pension to Martin J. Reynolds; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Martin J. Reynolds, late a private in Company K, Third Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and to pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL ROBBINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Robbins; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel Robbins, late of Company A, Twelfth Regiment Missouri State Militia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. WESTERHOUSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6721) granting a pension to John H. Westerhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, the name of John H. Westerhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers.

Mr. BRAGG. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6721) granting a pension to John H. Westerhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers, submit the following report:

The papers on file in this case show that claimant enlisted August 23, 1861, and was discharged May 29, 1865. In April, 1880, he applied for a pension, alleging that at Gettysburg, July 3, 1863, he incurred injury to his ankle, and that he also contracted lung disease in the service. The case was rejected on the ground of no record and no evidence of treatment in service or at discharge. Claimant assigns as a reason for his inability to furnish evidence of surgeon that there were so many wounded that he did not receive the care of that officer. Comrades John H. Clark, Lewis Mannahan, William D. Knepper all testify as to injury to ankle at battle of Gettysburg, and that at time of discharge he was suffering from hemorrhage of the lungs. Dr. H. M. Laney testifies to treating claimant upon his return from the Army for disease of lungs; found him spitting blood. James H. C. Burner, F. Eichelberger, and W. D. Knepper testify as to his disease of lungs from time of discharge, and that he has been lame since the war. Dr. H. M. Laney also adds:

"His case is a just one, and he is deserving of a pension. I knew him, before he entered the Army, as a stout, rugged boy, and when he returned he was used up for all time, as I supposed."

Dr. Thomas M. Huffman testifies to treating him for lung disease from 1871 to 1876. Dr. Cyrus A. Loose testifies to treating him for hemorrhage of the lungs from 1878 to 1882. The examining board of surgeons at Emporia, Kans., in 1883, after describing his disabilities, rate him one-half disabled. The case has three times been submitted for admission, but has been rejected by board of review on account of no record and no medical treatment.

The case is an unusually strong one; careful inquiry has been made as to credibility of the witnesses, and all are vouched for as truthful and reliable.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY S. WOODSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7073) granting a pension to Mary S. Woodson; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Woodson, widow of Henry B. Woodson, late a private in Company E, Twenty-sixth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES D. COTTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6117) granting a pension to James D. Cotton; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James D. Cotton, father of Thomas J. Cotton, deceased, late a private in Company H, Twenty-first Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANTOINETTE BIRNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, from $30 to $50 a month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7156) granting an increase of pension to Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, from $30 to $50 a month. Your committee has rigidly adhered to the rule, which they have prescribed, not to increase the pensions of widows of officers below the rank of general officers to the amount asked for in this bill, but they have recommended in many instances the increase of the pensions of the widows of general officers to the amount indicated in this bill.

They do not consider it necessary to specify the military services of General Birney. They are well known and have become no unimportant part of the history of his country. His widow is represented to be in impoverished circumstances. Your committee therefore, in view of this fact and the meritorious services of her deceased husband, report favorably, and recommend the passage of the bill.

A record of the military career of General Birney is hereto appended.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 1, 1886.

Statement of the military service of David Bell Birney, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office:

He entered the service as lieutenant-colonel Twenty-third Pennsylvania Infanty, April 21, 1861, and served with his regiment in General Patterson's column, on the Upper Potomac, until honorably mustered out, July 31, 1861.

He re-entered the service as a colonel of the Twenty-third Pennsylvania Infantry (three-years' regiment), August 31, 1861; was appointed brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, February 17, 1862, and major-general, United States Volunteers, May 20, 1863.

He commanded his regiment in the Army of the Potomac to February, 1862; the Second Brigade, First Division, Third Corps, to September 1, 1862; the First Division, Third Corps, to October 17, 1862; the Second Brigade, First Division, Third Corps, to November 16, 1862; the First Division, Third Corps, to March 26, 1864; the Third Division, Second Corps, to July 23, 1864, and the Tenth Army Corps to October 10, 1864. He was on sick-leave from the latter date until he died, at Philadelphia, Pa., October 18, 1864.

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I do not intend to enter any factious opposition to this bill, but only to enter my protest to this species of legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to enter my commendation of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire at the same time to say this woman was left a widow with six children, and has had the care and attention of them ever since.

Mr. CANNON. Did the husband die from disease or wounds in the Army?

Mr. BINGHAM. He died during the war, in 1864, from sickness contracted in the service. He was a major-general.

Mr. CANNON. What prevents her from getting a pension at the Pension Office?

Mr. BINGHAM. It is an increase of pension. She already draws a pension.

Mr. NEECE. I do not see any reason for discriminating between these cases. I can not see why one man's widow is better than another. I am opposed to this class of legislation. This whole land is filled with widows whose husbands went out under the first call for seventy-five thousand men. They staid in the service and followed Sherman to the sea, and when they died left little families of children to be cared for and educated. I object to making any distinction between them, as I am not able to see any good reason for doing so.

I do not want to enter any factious opposition to the passage of this bill, but I do want to enter a protest against this class of legislation, this kind of discrimination. I think it is doing a great wrong to the entire country. I favor pensioning every soldier or soldier's widow in the land who is entitled to a pension, but if a few are to be singled out and have a greater pension or an extra pension, why then there is wrong done to the others or to somebody. Besides we are building up a favored class by legislation at the expense of the masses of the people. Hence, Mr. Chairman, I enter my protest against the whole system.

Mr. BRAGG. Would not that apply to salaries of members of Congress as well?

Mr. NEECE. If you are going to take up the case of a single member of Congress and give him a special salary in excess of the others, I agree with you that it would apply to him. If my friend thinks that members of Congress as a class get too much salary, or that their pay is too high, let him show his hand to reduce their pay.

Mr. BRAGG. I am ready to show my hand now, and I say that I do not think they get enough pay. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEECE. We will have no quarrel about that.

Mr. PRICE. I fully agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] that these discriminations in granting pensions ought not to exist. I think the time has come when such legislation ought to be stopped. I agree with them further that we ought not to vote for them; but I disagree in this, that any opposition to the passage of this bill will be factious, and that they will not take advantage of and make effective any principle of parliamentary law by which they can defeat the passage of the bill. I propose to go a little further than that, and say that no minority of this House can pass any more of these bills while I am here. Therefore I object to this being laid aside with a favorable recommendation. When the question is taken upon laying it aside I shall ask that a quorum vote upon it, and if there is no quorum present I shall certainly object to its passage.

We might as well understand this thing now and be done with it. I have nothing against this lady, the widow of General Birney. I have nothing but kind feelings for her and her children. I am glad to know that she is on the pension-roll; but I do not know that there is such a difference between her case and thousands of other widows who are trying to bring up their children on a pension of $12 a month as would justify this increase.

Mr. DOCKERY. If the gentleman from Iowa insists upon his objection it will operate to suspend the passage of any more pension bills to-night.

Mr. PRICE. I can not help that; the bill can not pass without a quorum.

Mr. DOCKERY. It will obstruct the passage of all other pension legislation.

Mr. PRICE. I have examined the bill and the report thoroughly, and when it comes up on its passage I shall certainly make the objection that I have suggested. We might as well put a stop to it now.

Mr. BRADY was recognized.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] whether there are not a great number of the widows of major-generals now upon the pension-roll receiving $50 a month?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir, there are quite a number; at least forty. The Committee on Invalid Pensions of this Congress have simply been following the precedents laid down by several Congresses heretofore; and while many members of the committee are opposed to the principle, yet they can see no reason why a discrimination should be made against the widow of General Birney; and for that reason this bill was recommended favorably by the committee. They think she should have the same pension as the widows of other officers of the same rank.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let me ask the gentleman from Kansas if there has been in this House at its Friday sessions or at any other time the defeat of any proposition increasing the pension of the widow of a major-general from $30 to $60 a month?

Mr. MORRILL. There have been several occasions, and I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out, where objections have been made to the passage of the bill on account of the want of a quorum, and by consent they have been referred to the full House, and invariably the full House has sustained the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Has recognized the general principle?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRADY. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Allow me to ask another question in this connection. I understand the gentleman from Kansas to say that there are some forty cases of pensions which have been increased in this manner of widows of major-generals, and that the committee has invariably granted such relief, such being their practice. That being the case, may I ask why the committee does not report a general bill covering all this class of cases?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. That is just the question I intended to ask.

Mr. MORRILL. They have not deemed it their duty to do so, and no general bill looking to that end has been introduced; but when bills have been referred to the committee they have invariably reported them to the House, and the House has invariably without a solitary exception adopted their reports.

Mr. RANDALL. I presume the committee had not introduced a general bill, trusting rather to the necessities of each invidual case, and let those widows who are in need make their appeal to Congress.

I have been informed by two persons in whom I have the utmost confidence, whose statements are implicitly reliable, that the necessities of this lady are greater than we can well imagine here, and there has not been, as I hear, a pension ever granted yet to the widow of a major-general which would bring greater relief to a most worthy family than the pension in this case.

Mr. NEECE. Is she not drawing a pension now, and are not her children entitled to a pension?

Mr. RANDALL. The children are over age. She is drawing a pension of $30, of course.

Mr. PRICE. By permission of the gentleman from Virginia I desire to ask a question myself. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asked my friend from Kansas if it is not true that there are many precedents for this legislation, and the answer was that there are at least forty widows of general officers upon the pension-rolls by special act receiving this rate of pension. Now, I would like to ask him if there are not forty thousand widows throughout this land, widows of soldiers, who are not getting any pension whatever?

Mr. MORRILL. I presume there are forty thousand widows of private soldiers who are only receiving $12 a month. But Congress has always recognized a distinction on account of rank in the Army, as it did during the war. The private soldiers during the war received $13 a month, and the brigadier-generals $200 a month, because their services were considered more valuable. They required a higher order of talent, and the distinction of rank has been always recognized by this Congress and all preceding Congresses. We have established the precedent of giving widows of major-generals $50 per month; and I am at a loss to understand how any gentleman should insist upon making an exception of this particular case.

Mr. PRICE. We have established bad precedents, and we should make better ones. I propose to struggle for better precedents to guide the future than have been laid down by you gentlemen in the past.

Mr. MORRILL. I can not easily understand what the gentleman's object can be in obstructing the passage of this bill when the House has universally sustained us in giving widows of major-generals $50 a month.

Mr. PRICE. The course I am taking brings the light of discussion on the subject, and I hope there is enough common sense and honesty in Congress, when its attention is directed to it, to adopt a better policy.

Mr. MORRILL. I regret that the rest of the House have not as much honesty and common sense as the gentleman from Wisconsin claims for himself.

Mr. PRICE. I want to educate you up to the proper standard if you have common sense enough to understand the argument against this distinction.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no intention to discuss the question of either the intelligence or the honesty of the House. I believe the House, as well at its sessions on Friday evenings as when assembled in a full body, has the necessary intelligence and the necessary honesty for the discussion and conclusion of any question that may be submitted to it.

I have simply this to say, however, in connection with this case: Major-General Birney was not a graduate of West Point. He was a volunteer soldier and a volunteer officer, and at the age of thirty-nine years reached the rank and command of major-general of volunteer troops, commanding an army corps embracing over thirty thousand men. That he valiantly, ably, courageously, and patriotically performed his duty the records of the War Department exhibit, and it is a part of this report. That is the record.

This woman to-day absolutely needs all the generous gifts that this Government can give her.

Mr. NEECE. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania why does this make this widow any better than any other soldier's widow?

Mr. BINGHAM. I am not discussing that question, and perhaps, if the gentleman will allow me to say so, I would agree with him. But, as the gentleman on my right says, the House has not been educated up to that standard yet. Let us go by degrees and let us accept the patriotic position that the House has taken, that when the widows who are in distress and in want are the widows of general officers it is wise and proper to follow the precedent established and followed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions without an exception to advance their pensions from $30 to $50 per month. When we reach the condition the gentleman proposes I may be with him; but I want him to be with me to-day in that position that the House on Friday nights and on every other occasion during this session of Congress has taken, that when the widow of a general officer is in distress and in want the judgment, the generosity, and the patriotism of this House have always conceded an increase of pension from $30 to $50.

Mr. NEECE. I just want to say that so far as I am concerned those precedents do not govern me, and will not so long as my judgment remains as it is now. I believe a precedent that makes a distinction between citizens of this country before the law is wrong, and I will not follow it in any instance.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to delay the House in disposing of pension legislation, but I can not let this discussion pass without entering my protest against the theory which seems to be entertained by some gentlemen here that there is no distinction between the losses sustained by the widows of soldiers. Nor will I let this occasion pass without asserting that there is value in precedents, because a long line of precedents is a long line of decisions upon questions affecting the public judgment. I learn wisdom by studying the actions of men in the past, and well-considered precedents are the enunciations of that wisdom. I know that there are vastly more private soldiers than there are major-generals, and I know it is very easy to let a sentiment go out uncontradicted to educate men into the belief that they have been wronged because of the distinctions that are made in pensions; but I caution gentlemen here, when they assert superior wisdom, to examine into the motives which influence them.

I undertake to say that a pension is granted for the purpose, as nearly as may be, of supplying the loss suffered as the result of the war. I do not think we grant large enough pensions to the rank and file of the Army. I do not think we grant any too large pensions to the widows of general officers. I deny that a man who was fit to command a division in the Army was not better able to earn a pension for his wife and children than the man who ordinarily commanded a company; and I assert as a general proposition that when the man who commanded a division laid down his life upon the battlefield or in the hospital, the financial loss to his widow and family, and to their prospects in life, was greater than the loss in the case of a man lower in command or in the ranks. This is not always true, to be sure, but it ought to be always true that men who reach high command are fitted for their positions, and therefore we make a general rule.

Mr. BRADY. More valuable to the country too.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; more valuable to the country; but the question here is not so much about value to the country; the point here is the greater loss to the widow and children of such a man. I will go as far as any gentleman in this House in voting pensions to soldiers—I was one of them. But I will not stand here and stultify myself by letting it go out that I think the widow of General Grant or of General Sherman, if those distinguished officers had died upon the battlefield, would suffer no greater financial loss than the widows of other men who went into the Army as I went—men not competent to earn as much salary or to procure as many comforts for their wives and families. I think those of us who are willing to do justice by the widows of general officers are just as willing to do justice to the widows of the rank and file, and I will be found side by side with my brother from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] in trying to do them all justice; but I will not attempt to stir up prejudice among the rank and file or to teach them that the Congress of the United States is not willing, as far as the nation is able, to do justice to them all. [Applause.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I thought it proper to oppose all such measures as this until it became apparent to me that my opposition to them in common with other members of this House who see the matter as I do could not amount to anything. At former Friday night sessions when similar bills were presented to the House I for one was ready to make the point of no quorum rather than see such bills pass when so few members were present. I regarded it as an abuse of the courtesy which the full House has shown to those who are interested in pensions by giving them this special order and encouraging pension legislation. But when the point of no quorum was made and those bills were passed over to the full House, the full House having sustained this kind of legislation, its decision became, to that extent, the common law for my guidance; and while I sympathize and agree fully with the sentiment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] that this kind of legislation indicates a tendency to extravagance which we ought not to encourage, I can not agree with him in his conception of duty when he goes so far as to make the point of no quorum and thus retard the progress of the business of these Friday evening sessions. I can not regard that as wise when we have before us the decision of the full House, plain and unmistakable, that it is the sentiment of this Congress that such legislation shall be had. My opposition, Mr. Chairman, to this kind of legislation arises from a sense of duty. When I contemplate the tendency of our pension legislation it becomes appalling. When I realize that we, by our extravagant action in this direction—and I do not believe any man will question the statement that it is extravagant—when I realize that we, as the trusted servants of the citizens of this country, the tax-payers of this country, are profligately piling upon them burdens of taxation which they must discharge by sweat and toil, I am unwilling to encourage it; yet I propose to oppose it in what I deem to be a legitimate and proper way.

So far as the extravagance of our pension legislation is concerned, no man who has had experience as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions or who undertakes to look over the legislation introduced into this House on the subject of pensions can doubt it. Not only has our committee been asked to recommend and the House to pass a bill removing the limitation upon arrearages of pensions, a measure involving the ultimate expenditure of $500,000,000—not a dollar short of it—but we have been asked to grant a pension to every soldier who bore arms during the late rebellion in defense of the Union. These measures, together with every other class of pension legislation which could be thought of by the extravagant fancy of any man who some might be so uncharitable as to suppose was tempted to angle for the soldiers' vote, have been presented here.

I am opposed to this extravagance. If we had money to spend on the soldiers of the late war without burdening the honest laborers of the country to pay this money I perhaps would be as willing as any gentleman on this floor to grant ample pensions. I believe I have as high regard as any other member can have for the valor that prompted men to leave their homes and their families, to sever the ties with which they were surrounded, in order to respond to the call of their country's need—to rally to the battlefield, and with that true American manhood follow the flag of their country to the cannon's mouth on the reddened field of death, not counting the cost, but ready to sacrifice their lives at the demand of duty. When it comes to rewarding such men or undertaking to measure the appreciation which this country ought to extend to them my mind staggers; I am unable to calculate the debt of gratitude which the country owes to these soldiers.

But, Mr. Chairman, this country has never proposed to pay to these men an ample recompense for their services. That is not the principle of pensions. If we should undertake to pay to the widow of every soldier who lost his life in battle a just recompense for the loss she sustained, it would bankrupt the world to pay for the life of one man. When you undertake to measure in dollars and cents the worth of that man who tore himself loose from the embrace of his wife and family when they met around the family altar to ask the benedictions of Heaven upon that family soon to be parted—when you undertake to measure the womanhood and the courage which induced that mother or wife to kiss her husband or son farewell and deliver him up to the cause of the country—I say money becomes worthless, acres of fertile land become worthless compared with such valor. We do not propose to measure in money that great debt.

This Government has undertaken, so far as it can, to recognize services of this kind by providing a competency for the widows and dependent relatives of the soldiers whose lives were lost in defense of their country. To remunerate them with a competency, or something like an adequate support for their necessities, is as far as this country has ever promised to go. If I have any disposition to extravagance, Mr. Chairman, it is in the direction of granting liberal pensions to those soldiers who yet remain among us, who carry their empty sleeves and whose forms are emaciated in consequence of injuries received in battle. The members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions will bear me witness that I have always been in favor of granting liberal pensions to the soldiers who are yet among us but whose lives have been wrecked in their service to their country.

In reference to the repeal of the limitation on arrears I will say I believe it to be my duty as a member of Congress to support each and every reasonable measure looking to the relief of our needy and disabled soldiers, but I do not believe any gentleman on this floor will deny that extravagance can be reached even in the matter of pensions. An annual pension for physical or mental disability as a result of service in the Army is a debt against the Government, and should be paid promptly and fully.

This bill proposes to extend what is commonly known as the limitation clause of the arrears-of-pension act to January 1, 1888.

The present pension laws provide that pensioners admitted to the rolls shall be paid from the date of filing in the Pension Office their application for a pension at the rate to which the degree of their disabilities entitles them.

In other words, the law provides that every soldier or sailor of the Army or Navy who incurred a disability while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty shall be paid a pension in proportion to the degree of such disability. No claim for pension, however meritorious, can be adjusted or paid unless the claimant avails himself of the remedies which the law affords. In fact, no consistent law could do more than furnish the opportunity to the claimant of putting himself in the way of receiving the relief which the law affords.

This bill, however, proposes to do more; it proposes to grant arrears of pension to claimants for that period of time to which they claim to be entitled and in which they declined or failed to avail themselves of the remedies afforded by the then existing laws. It is hardly fair to presume that any man would not be conscious of such existing disabilities as would entitle him to the benefits of a pension. I take it for granted that no man would consider it dishonorable to apply for a pension for wounds or other disabilities incurred in the service of his country. In fact I do not consider it the duty of Congress to provide for either of these emergencies. If a man is entitled to pension, and will comply with the laws in such cases made and provided, there would be no necessity for a law authorizing the payment of arrears of pensions, even granting that such a law would be a proper one, which I deny.

The most plausible argument which I have heard offered in favor of the proposed bill is the statement that those who applied for pension prior to July 1, 1880, received the benefits of the arrears act, while those who applied after that date were deprived of the benefits of arrears, and that this is unjust to the latter class. Before this argument can be admitted with any degree of consideration it must be first established that the principle of arrears of pension is right, and when that fact is established it exposes this bill as one productive of the same hardships and unfair discriminations which it proposes to correct.

If arrears of pension is right, I take it for granted that it is entirely so. If it is wrong, I take it for granted that it is entirely so. This bill would indicate that the law would be right until January 1, 1888, after which time it would be wrong, or that it is altogether wrong. If it is wrong, the discrimination in favor of those who applied for pension prior to July 1, 1880, does not amount to an injustice to those who applied after that date. No man is done an injustice in this matter unless he is deprived of something to which he is entitled.

When I was appointed as a member of the Invalid Pensions Committee I found a long-established custom prevailing in the case of private bills not to recommend the passage of a bill granting back pay save in cases where the claim was filed in the Pension Office, fully proven and well established, and the papers and proof were lost or misplaced in the office, and these cases were rare indeed. I believe each member of the committee, as well as each member of the House who has taken the pains to examine the reports of the committee, or has done us the honor to attend on the Friday night sessions of the House, will bear me witness in the statement that the cases reported from that committee are of the most meritorious class; yet these claimants, who because of some mere technicality have been unable to comply with the requirements of the Pension Office, and are compelled to come to Congress for relief, are deprived by this long-established custom of any pension of date prior to the passage of the bill for their relief. One of the very first suggestions which I made to the committee was to alter that custom, and give these claimants a pension from the date of filing their application. The committee have not as yet adopted that policy.

Now, how can it be that this bill and that custom, rigidly adhered to both by the committee and this House, are right? They can not both be right; but I can easily understand how they are both wrong; this bill is wrong in that it gives a pension prior to the filing of the application; the custom is wrong in that it does not give pension from the date of filing; this custom does amount to an injustice and can not be defended. If the beneficiaries of these private bills are entitled to pension at all they are entitled to it from the filing of their applications, and if they are not entitled to it you ought to quit passing bills for their relief.

I do not want to be so uncharitable as to believe that if this unfortunate class of claimants were greater in number, or wielded a more potent influence in the election of members of Congress, their wants would very soon become the hobby of members of Congress and they the beneficiaries of more liberal legislation, but unless this apparent inconsistency is explained I fear that some may become so very naughty as to entertain that belief.

I have heard it whispered in undertones that no member who opposed any pension bill could be returned to Congress. If I, as the Representative of an honorable constituency, conceived it to be my duty to bring about my re-election at the sacrifice of my honest convictions of right, and that the very respectable soldier constituency which I have the honor to represent on this floor could be swayed by such considerations, then such utterances might tend to terrorize me; but knowing as I do that the soldiers of our country who so gallantly defended our flag form a part of our truest, best, most honorable, and intellectual citizenship, and believing as I do that it is my duty to act in all matters of an official character as my judgment dictates and the best interests of my constituents and the whole country demand, regardless of future consequences, I have taken the attitude which I now occupy with reference to this bill.

I believe in liberal and just pensions, but I believe in distributing the benefits of pension equally among our worthy disabled soldiers. Under our present laws it is impossible for a very considerable class of our most worthy soldiers and their widows and dependent relatives to receive any benefits from the pension laws. I give one case to illustrate this idea. I read the decision in the case of Henrietta Fisher:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3954) granting a pension to Henrietta Fisher, having considered the same, submit the following report:

We do not consider it necessary to elaborate the report beyond the following decision of the Pension Office in this case, which we give entire, to wit:

"Certificate 153354. Henrietta Fisher, widow of Thaddeus Fisher, Company B, Fourth United States Colored Troops.

"The soldier was a pensioner on account of amputation of the right thigh from a gunshot wound received at Petersburg, Va., June 15, 1864, and died September 26, 1870. The cause of death is shown by the statement of Dr. S. D. Gross, as follows: 'Died under my care, of hemorrhage, consequent upon an operation performed upon him for the cure of aneurism of a stump of the right thigh, amputated, as I am informed, during the late war on account of a gunshot injury.'

"The widow was pensioned and continued to draw her pension until September 4, 1875, when payment thereof was suspended pending an investigation of the merits of the case in common with all Philadelphia claims. During this investigation Dr. Gross made the following statement before Special Examiner Sprague: 'That he performed an operation upon the stump of one of his (Fisher's) thighs at the Jefferson Medical College some years ago on account of an aneurismal state of the main artery and veins of said stump, and that he attended said Fisher up to the time of his death, about ten days after said operation. He does not believe that the affection of the vessels for which he performed the operation in question had any connection with or dependency upon the gunshot injury for the relief of which the limb was amputated.'

"Upon this statement the widow's name was dropped, on the ground that the soldier's death was not chargeable to his military service.

"Upon appeal to the honorable Secretary of the Interior this action was affirmed March 25, 1878, and again June 15, 1880.

"The medical referee, under date of May 9, 1882, questioned the correctness of the action of the office upon the mere opinion of the doctor, and expressed the opinion that the chances are that the aneurism on which Dr. Gross operated was an outgrowth of the amputation. In a subsequent opinion that office states that unless the opinion of Dr. Gross, who is authority upon surgical questions, can be set aside the action of dropping the widow's name from the rolls must be adhered to.

"Dr. Gross is dead; his conflicting statements can not now be reconciled. The fact remains the same; the soldier died because of an operation performed on an amputated limb. Would the artery and vein at the point of the operation have become aneurismal but for the amputation of the limb, necessitated by the wound received in line of duty?

"There must have been cause for this diseased condition, and no other element is apparent. How can the opinion of Dr. Gross be overcome? It is not at all probable that it could be done; at least a professional mind could not be satisfied on that point by lay testimony, in particular such as could be expected in the case of a colored claimant.

Yet the case appears meritorious upon its face.

The case having been settled by the Department, the office is estopped from taking action except upon the filing of the new and material evidence.

Respectfully submitted.

April 4, 1885.

A. VANGEUDER.

The foregoing statement was prepared at my request, and I concur in the views therein expressed.

N. P. LOVERIDGE, Q. D. C.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

This case stood rejected until Congress afforded relief by special act. Many soldiers who served faithfully through the entire war, having been exposed to all kinds of weather and hardships incident to soldier life, came home only to find their homes destroyed and their health ruined; yet they are unable to procure pensions because there is no record evidence of medical treatment in the service and they are unable to furnish competent medical evidence of the incurrence of a specific disability in the service and line of duty.

Some of the best soldiers have the poorest hospital record, yet it is held by our laws and the regulations had thereunder to be an almost indispensable condition precedent to granting pension.

All over our country there are worthy men with honorable discharges in their pockets from long and faithful service in the wars of our Republic, whose health has failed and who are old and poor, suffering day by day for the common necessaries of life.

There are also widows of worthy soldiers who can not procure pensions because their husbands' service was not the immediate cause of their death, yet they have no money, are unable to labor, and are now eking out a miserable existence in woe and want. The long bony fingers of famine have plucked the rose bloom from their cheeks and left them pale and emaciated; nay more, our poor-houses are full of these worthy benefactors of our country, and day by day the potter's field is made the resting place of those who in the vigor of life and full of hope and promise placed their all upon their country's altar. Who cares for them? Who comes in the day of their adversity as a guardian angel to scatter on their scanty board the offerings of gratitude, or to clear away the clouds of anguish and allow a few rays of sunshine bless their closing day?

This bill does not propose to do it; no man receives a dollar of the money to be expended under this bill who is not placed on the pension-roll at the rate to which their disability entitles them, and who, in the absence of this proposed law, would receive pension from the date of filing their application. Annuity in the way of pension is a relief; but there is no relief in this bill. If you would offer relief by pension legislation, place your arms beneath the poor soldiers and lift them out of the poor-houses, and withhold your lavish hand before you wring from the brow of honest toil so vast a sum of money when its expenditure will not relieve a serious want.

Granting that all concede to the correctness of paying all honorable pensions, may I, Mr. Chairman, be allowed to submit, without being considered prejudiced against the interest of honest and fair pensions, that there is another question beside the abstract proposition of paying out the money that is interwoven into this controversy, affecting not only the people of the district which I have the honor to represent, but the people of the whole country; that question, Mr. Chairman, is the cost entailed on the Treasury by the passage of this bill. It is true we have in round numbers $200,000,000 now in the Treasury, and we are in the habit of calling that a surplus. There is no reasonable excuse for that money being in the Treasury. It ought to have been paid out long since on the national debt, on which we are paying interest at the rate of millions per annum. How can we claim to have a surplus with $200,000,000 available and a debt hanging over us of $1,500,000,000?

The country is groaning under a system of high taxation from which it is our duty to relieve the toiling and oppressed masses. How, I ask in the name of sixty millions of people, can we hope to be able to afford any relief to the tax-payer if we spend all our time in extravagant legislation, hunting a way to get rid of the money in the Treasury without paying the bonded debt?

Have the people a right to know what this bill will cost? Has anybody any rights in this matter save those to be benefited by it? I answer yes, and the answer may be read in the face of every man whose toil and sweat have earned the money now in the Treasury and whose toil and sweat in the future are mortgaged to national banks and bondholders as collateral for the payment of the public debt. We have a right to ask what the proposed bill will cost and how it is to be paid.

Grant, for the sake of argument, that the $200,000,000 now in the Treasury is not needed to pay the public debt, and that we do not want our taxes reduced, then let us see if we are prepared to enact this bill into a law.

We have in the Treasury $200,000,000; of that amount one hundred million is necessary to redeem or stand as a basis of the greenback circulation. This leaves available $100,000,000.

This bill will involve the immediate expenditure of $222,000,000, which will leave to be raised by increased taxation $122,000,000 to meet the payment of arrears—a deficit of over $2 for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

This bill proposes to tax each person in the United States $3.75, or $15 for each voter. Besides this, a deficit of twenty-five millions for the current fiscal year is now staring us in the face, which augments the additional revenues to be raised by sweat and labor.

If we pass this bill we deplete the Treasury, increase the taxes, and must abandon all hope of affording any aid for educational purposes, and fasten on our children a debt for which they will never rise up and call us blessed.

He who lives for himself and the present only lives to but little purpose. He who would have the world better by his having lived in it must not lay burdens on those to come after him which he would not himself bear. In the name of your children I warn you, beware of how you burden them with responsibilities. The day of their adversity will come surely and swiftly. The national debt, however badly managed, increased by gratuitous legislation in favor of the bondholder, whether by changing the nature of his demand by fixing it on a specie basis, making the interest thereon payable semi-annually in gold, demonetizing silver, driving it from our circulation, or increasing the value of debts and securities by contracting the volume of our circulating medium by retiring one-half of our metal money, it is a debt that must be paid or the fair name of our Republic must be tarnished by repudiation.

So far as concerns the case immediately before us, I know we ought to appreciate the services and the rank and the ability of these general officers who led the soldiers of this country to victory in the late war; but I can not see why the widow of a major-general or a brigadier-general has any more title to the respect of this country than the widow of that poor soldier who during the heat of summer and the blasts of winter bore the knapsack and the musket and bared his breast to the pelting storm of bullets from the ranks of the enemy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, is my time out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there was no general debate on this bill, and the debate is proceeding now upon the amendments, subject in the opinion of the Chair to the five-minute rule.

Mr. TAULBEE. As a parliamentary question, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask by what rule is debate limited on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am, of course, subject to the rules.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no amendment, and the debate is proceeding upon the bill as reported favorably from the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds he was under a misapprehension. He was under the impression that the committee had reported an amendment to this bill, but finds it was the preceding bill. The gentleman from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am through with my remarks. I merely wanted to know the rule under which we were proceeding.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, whether or not there be any rule to limit debate on this and other bills at these evening sessions, it seems to me, in view of the fact that the question under discussion has been so thoroughly discussed heretofore, it is a hardship upon members to consume time in discussing this bill. There are other bills on the Calendar in which members representing the interest of their constituents are interested, and we want to vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, before this vote is taken I merely want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] for tendering the issue squarely. It is the first time in this discussion that the issue has been fairly tendered that the wife of a major-general is better than the wife of a private soldier.

Mr. ROWELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say any such thing. I said her financial loss was greater. The widow of a private soldier is entitled to just as much respect as the widow of a President.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The gentleman's remark will show his position is that which he first took. That is, if it is not changed between now and when it appears in print.

Mr. ROWELL. It will not be changed.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The gentleman takes the ground that it takes more ability to command than to follow, and that consequently the widows of those who commanded are entitled to more consideration than the widows of those who followed them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do you question that?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman that he tenders the issue fairly, and it is an issue which this House has got to meet, whether or not there is to be rank established in this country by law. Whether or not because a man gets a certain position in the country he is better than the man who has much more brains than he has, but who does not occupy a position of the same character that he does; that is the question.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the law pertaining to the question of pensions, whether the pension of a widow of a private soldier or the pension of an officer. It makes distinction between the grade of private soldier and the respective rank held by the officers.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. As I say, the law holds that, but the gentleman gets clear away from the position we are discussing. I ask you now, is the law right?

Mr. BINGHAM. Absolutely right.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. You tender the issue fairly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Absolutely right.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. That is a fair way to tender the issue. The gentleman says the law is right.

Mr. BINGHAM. Absolutely right.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. That is the way to tender the issue; that the law is absolutely right. Now let me say you are driving on, as I said before, to create an aristocracy in this country by force of legislation. We have had it in years past, and we have it now, between ladies at this capital, as to who shall be considered the first lady in the land. Because she happens to be the wife of this or that Cabinet officer she is to outrank every other woman in this land. We not only have it here, but we are to have it understood by means of the law. It must ultimately become ingrafted in the law of the land that the wife of a Senator is better than the wife of a humble Representative, and the latter must call first upon the wife of a Senator and the latter can return that call by means of a card, simply because she is the wife of a United States Senator. It is all going in the line of rank—all going in the line there can be such a thing in this country, because in position one person outranks another. It is obnoxious to the common people of the country and to the spirit of our free institutions. It is an imitation of the rank in society of the Old World, and is wholly obnoxious to our principles of government. It is law only so far as we consent to agree to it, but it will ultimately become law in this country unless we refuse to recognize it in every shape and form. It will ultimately become the fixed law of the land, and will be another step onward, until finally it will become ingrafted upon our statute-books in the solemn legislation of the country that there is such a thing as rank among us.

The gentleman says that because a man happens to be a major-general he is entitled to more consideration and more compensation for himself and family than another who does not happen to be a major-general. I have the history of a man who started in the war as a private. By means of his ability, by means of his bravery, he was promoted to lieutenant, then to captain, next to colonel, and finally he became a brigadier-general. To-day that man is filling a position down here at the Treasury Department as messenger at a salary of $700 a year. If that man had more ability than men who carried the musket under him he would not be in that position to-day.

The rule is not a good one, nor in accordance with the past history of this country. It is true that if a man while in the Army happens to get shoulder-straps a great many people in the country hold because he happens to have that high rank he is better than the private soldier, and it has actually got to be that if a man in Congress happens to get here he must never under any circumstances rank lower than a colonel, and if he does not rank up to a colonel, then he must be a judge at least. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it follows in the Army as in civil life the desire in every minor officer is to obtain promotion? Does not that desire to attain promotion bring about good relations through the whole Army just as the desire to advance in civil life spurs the individual to greater exertion in order to occupy the higher position? It keeps spurring him on from the cradle to the grave. If the result is worth anything it is worth striving for, and society is so arranged the higher position and the larger reward belong to those who fairly earn them.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is all there is worth living for.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, I will answer my friend's speech, not his question, because he said he wanted to ask a question, and then rose and made a speech. I say that the same motive actuated the private soldier in the field that actuated the gentleman from Illinois. He was born in the county that I live in—no, I believe he was born in North Carolina. I ought not, perhaps, to have told that [laughter]; but he emigrated from my county, and by his ambition and the power of his intellect he has got into position among men with a national reputation. Now, answer me a question. Do you want it ingrafted upon the statute-books of the land that you are the superior of the boy you started out with, or do you want to leave it to the people and to the country to determine?

Mr. SYMES. That is not the question at all of the gentleman from Illinois. The question is whether his services as a member of Congress are entitled to $5,000 a year now, or whether he ought to be placed upon an equality with a nine-hundred-dollar clerk in the Departments. The gentleman from Indiana gets away from the question. It is a pecuniary question exclusively.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Yes, sir; I appreciate that. But I fear if we measure our salaries by the amount of ability we bring that some of us would get very small salaries indeed. I admit that.

Mr. SYMES. I thought some would probably get rich before we got away from here. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. But the clerk in the Department has no expenses of a campaign. [Great laughter.] He merely performs a clerical work.

Mr. BRADY. Does the gentleman think that the pay ought to be regulated by the expense of the campaign?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. It has something to do with it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. What is it?

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask how long it has been since the clerks in the Departments were exempt from bearing a portion of the expense of political campaigns?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I do not suppose they are yet exempt from it, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. TAULBEE. But I understand you to say that they are not at any expense on account of the campaign. Now I want to know when that ceased?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. But that issue is not a fair one, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. TAULBEE. If it is not a fair one, why did you make it?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I have no doubt that there are clerks in the Departments who have more ability, upon some questions at least, than many members on this floor possess.

But you are not here fixing the compensation of a major-general. The question is an entirely different one. You are fixing the compensation of the widow of a general officer who has made no more sacrifices for the country than thousands of other women have done. If the pension is to be granted for the sacrifices made, then one should have just as much as the other. If you are now to make it on the ground of the rank held by the officer and because this lady is the general's wife—the wife of a major-general—and you say that she is entitled to a higher pension than the wife of an inferior officer or of a soldier, then I want that to be distinctly understood. Let it be understood that she gets the higher pension on account of higher rank.

I want to answer the gentleman from Kentucky a little further. He is upon the Pension Committee. He says that he is a friend of the soldier. I want to call his attention to how carefully he guards his remarks. He says he thinks there is not a man upon this floor who has more respect for the Union soldier than he has; and says if the Treasury was full to overflowing that perhaps he might be in favor of granting pensions to these men. He couples his statement with a condition that if we were able to pay these pensions perhaps he would be in favor of doing so.

Mr. ROWELL. I think the gentleman has interpolated a word there.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. What is it?

Mr. ROWELL. The word "perhaps."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. In whose language?

Mr. ROWELL. Mine.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I was not talking of the gentleman from Illinois. I got past that some time ago. I was referring to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I think the gentleman has interpolated two or three periods into my speech.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. As I said before, I do not intend to offer any factious opposition to the passage of this bill. Let gentlemen put it upon the ground of right, and not say because it has been done here and there that consequently we must follow the precedent. If you do, I ask where reform in legislation is to come from? If this Congress is here merely to sit and follow precedents passed by former Congresses, then I ask the gentleman from Kentucky where the great principles of economy and reform are to come in? We had just as well break loose from these precedents first as last. If they are right follow them. The gentleman admits the principle is vicious. The Committee on Invalid Pensions each and every one of them admits that they have offered no general bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. TAULBEE. I think if I am permitted to correct a misapprehension which the gentleman has of my remarks, that might obviate all this speech on which he has entered.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am not entering on my speech. I am just quitting. [Laughter].

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman is now ready to quit, I am ready to let the matter rest where it is.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I am just going to quit.

Mr. TAULBEE. Very well; if you will quit I will say nothing more.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest that we take a vote on this bill in committee, and then agree to submit it to a full House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

MARY A. THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6747) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary A. Thomas, a volunteer nurse and superintendent of nurses in the late war, and to pay her the sum of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. SWOPE. An amendment was directed by the committee, but by some inadvertence has not been attached to the bill. The amendment was to strike out "$50" and insert "$25."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] moves to amend the bill by striking out "$50" and inserting "$25."

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. McCOMAS. It is a very long report. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his demand.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I do not insist.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I call for the reading of the report. When we are asked to vote $25 per month I want to know the reason why we do so.

The Clerk commenced to read the report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR (interrupting the reading). I beg to state that I withdraw the call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] called for the reading.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not insist on the further reading of the report. I want to know simply whether this pension is for service or for disability. If the gentleman in charge of the bill will make a short statement he can give us that information.

Mr. SWOPE. Mrs. Thomas, I understand, is old and feeble and poor, suffering from the effects of her service in nursing the wounded and sick soldiers. The Committee on Invalid Pensions directed that the $50 in the bill should be reduced to $25, which is the ordinary sum recommended by the committee for volunteer nurses. By some inadvertence the report was neglected to be altered in accordance with that direction, and the bill also.

The case of Mrs. Thomas, so far as I am acquainted with it, is exactly parallel with those of many others who have been allowed a similar pension. The Committe on Invalid Pensions have had it in serious consideration whether this amount, for which there are already a great many precedents, should not be diminished; whether, in fact, it is not too large. They have not yet arrived at a conclusion with respect to that, but they propose to give it immediate consideration. In the mean while this bill has been reported for the action of the House.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I do not wish to make any opposition to this bill, but I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the desirability of having a general law in regard to the matter of pensioning Army nurses. This bill gives to this woman a pension equivalent, I believe, to the pension of a lieutenant-colonel. There were different grades of nurses, superintendent nurses, regular nurses, volunteer nurses, and irregular nurses. Some served for a long time, some for a short time. Some were disabled and some were not disabled.

I think it is altogether wrong to create a dead level and to put every one of these ladies who applies for it, and whose case passes the committee, on the pension-roll at $25 per month. I do not desire, however, to offer any opposition to this bill, because I do not know enough about its merits. But we should certainly proceed with this pension legislation in a proper and orderly and sensible manner. Let us have general legislation covering every possible class, and then let us act up to the general law, and not be coming in with a special bill for every woman that happened to serve in the Army for a greater or less time as a nurse. I called for the reading of the report in order to ascertain whether this lady was simply pensioned as a nurse without reference to disability or whether she had rendered any particular service or suffered any disability that entitled her to a pension.

Mr. NEECE. I desire to say on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the committee have adopted a rule that they would not pension a nurse simply because she was a nurse, but she must show a disability that grew out of the service. And where the committee give $25 a month, it is to those nurses who were superintendents and worked without pay. Where this was not the case, the pension is $12.

Mr. McCOMAS. As I introduced this bill, and as this lady is from Maryland, I wish to say that as regards her disability it is here vouched for in the strongest terms by the surgeon who was in charge of the general army hospital at Frederick, Md., for several years, Dr. Weir, of New York, an eminent specialist; and Dr. Murray, Surgeon-General of the United States Army, also attests the same condition of disability and recommends this pension.

This lady was a superintendent of nurses in a large general army hospital. She received the wounded from South Mountain, from Antietam, and from Gettysburg, the hospital being between those three battlefields. She was there from 1862 to 1865. This pension is asked for her as a superintendent of nurses in a general hospital, for her most unremitting care and for her most faithful services.

This pension is not to be given because of the services of somebody else. It is not the case of the widow of a major-general, a matter which seems to excite gentlemen here who are opposed to that policy. But the pension is for her own services, which were arduous and constant during those years of the war.

The report and the exhibits make it conclusive and clear that this is one of the strongest possible cases of personal service of great merit and of injury received and well attested.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as regards the amount, the amount here given is that which is given in lesser cases, as I understand from the discussion, but this lady nurse belonged to the highest grade.

This lady was the general superintendent of the nurses in that very extensive general hospital. I hope this pension will be voted without a single voice of opposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman [Mr. McCOMAS] if this lady is not now in the employ of the Government in one of the Departments here and drawing a good salary?

Mr. McCOMAS. This lady is, I believe, for the present—I do not know how long she will remain—in some position. I do not know exactly what the position is, but I presume she receives a very modest salary, and whether she is to retain it for a few months more or less matters not here. This service is twenty years old; it extended over four years; and this pension is for the remainder of her life if her case is to be treated like that of a pension for a private soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE] striking out "50" and inserting "25;" so as to make the provision read:

And pay her a pension of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes none.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist upon the point that no quorum has voted. I make the point simply for the reason that we have had such a thorough discussion of the question of pensions and of the details of rank in Washington society, that I think it behooves us all, before we proceed any further in granting pensions, to consider this subject carefully and to thoroughly digest the immense amount of learning in regard to it which has been furnished us this evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The Chair sustains the point of order. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] to act as tellers.

Mr. CANNON. Pending that, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. It is addressed partly to the Chair and partly to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]. A number of us have come up here this evening to get some meritorious bills through, and we are very busy and do not want to come here again next Friday night if we can help it. I hardly think the gentleman from Wisconsin is serious, and I hope he will not insist upon his point, but will let us go through these bills about which no question is made.

Mr. BRAGG. I propose to make a question on all of them. It has been distinctly announced that there are gentlemen here who oppose giving any increase of pension to the relicts of soldiers who were officers, and if there is nobody else in this House who is willing to take up the gauntlet in defense of officers I will do it myself, and when the question is pending here whether a major-general's widow shall receive the pension that has always been awarded to the widows of officers of that rank, and notice is given to this committee that that pension shall not pass without the point of "no quorum" being raised, I propose to step right down and stop the progress of this little coterie of citizens assembled here as Representatives until we can have that question settled.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is through with his speech I will insist again upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that this bill is not the case in which the gauntlet is thrown down. This is the case of a poor volunteer nurse; and if the gentleman feels bound to make the point of no quorum, let him make it in a case where the question is raised upon the pension of the widow of a general officer, and not in this case.

Mr. BRAGG. I have made the point; I have made it advisedly, and I shall insist upon it. No more bills shall be passed by this body until that question is settled.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] will bear with me, I think he is mistaken as to a matter of fact. He does not seem to be aware that the bill to which he refers granting a pension to the widow of a major-general has passed the committee. Because that major-general's widow's pension bill has passed the committee, therefore the bills for the benefit of private soldiers shall not pass. That seems to be the gentleman's point.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes —.

Mr. BRAGG (during the count by tellers). Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to persist in my point. If the Committee of the Whole will rise and the House pass the bill for the relief of Mrs. Birney I have no objection to going on with other business.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], who made the point that no quorum was present, has proposed that if the committee will rise and report the bill recommended by the committee for the benefit of Mrs. Birney——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that that bill has been laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir; that is in the line of what I was saying. The gentleman's proposition is now that the committee rise, that the House pass the bill, and that then we can proceed to relieve all those one-legged soldiers to whom we are trying to grant pensions to-night. I wish to submit to him a modification of his proposition. If he will withdraw the point that no quorum has voted, and will allow these other bills to be put by this Committee of the Whole in the same position in which the bill for the relief of Mrs. Birney has been placed by the action of the committee, then when we go into the House to pass these bills I will use what endeavors I can in a legitimate way to bring about the passage of his bill.

A MEMBER. That is fair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin withdraw the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain that motion so long as the point that no quorum has voted is insisted upon.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the report of the tellers discloses the fact that there is no quorum present, should not the committee under the rule rise and report that fact to the House after a roll-call?

The CHAIRMAN. After the roll-call.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then I suppose the roll-call is the only thing in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is insisted upon, the Chair will direct the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is a motion that the committee rise in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. TAULBEE. Believing as I do that a call of the roll would be a waste of time and that the only way out of this difficulty is for the committee to rise by unanimous consent, I will ask—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Chair hold that the Committee of the Whole can not rise in the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TAULBEE. That is my understanding of the position of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read clause 2 of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, the meaning of the rule just read is that where the Committee of the Whole desires to procure the attendance of a quorum, it shall be able to resort for that purpose to the procedure prescribed in that rule; but I submit that the Committee of the Whole has at any time the power to rise upon a motion for that purpose, the motion that the committee rise being analogous in committee to the motion to adjourn in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. With great deference to the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] upon any question connected with the rules, the present occupant of the Chair will state he has heretofore held that when the point of no quorum is made pending a division in the Committee of the Whole and is insisted upon, the rule is imperative and the Chair has no alternative, but must insist upon the roll being called, unless the point of no quorum be temporarily withdrawn so that the motion that the committee rise may be made.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is it in order for the committee to rise at this time by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it is.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin is willing to withdraw the point of no quorum so that the committee can rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he is willing to withdraw the point made by him for the purpose of allowing the motion to be made that the committee rise?

Mr. BRAGG. I am.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Wisconsin certainly can not control this committee by his supreme will. If the point of no quorum is withdrawn I hope we will proceed with the business of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Wisconsin to withdraw his point of no quorum. On the vote upon the question submitted the ayes have it and the amendment is adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 22.

So the committee refused to rise.

This soldier is now in receipt of a pension for gunshot wound, described as follows by J. L. Stewart, president board of examining surgeons:

"Gunshot wound of posterior surface of left leg, leaving an ulcerated, discharging wound 3½ inches long over the lower part of the gastrocnemius muscle, the lower third of which muscle has been removed by inflammatory action and discharges, producing pain and weakness of the leg and ankle, and impairing his ability for manual labor, causing a disability equal to the loss of a hand or foot."

Dr. Pickett has appeared personally before your committee, and, having examined him carefully, they find the leg atrophied, with a large ulceration, which is evidently incurable.

The leg requires bandaging to be constantly renewed, and is offensive to the smell. This has impaired his general health and reduced it to so low an ebb that an amputation of the leg, though very much to be desired, would now be exceedingly dangerous and probably fatal.

Taking all things into consideration, your committee think that this pensioner would be better off had his leg been amputated.

They recommend that the bill be amended by striking out "$50" and inserting "$36," and that so amended it do pass.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN BUTLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5411) granting a pension to John Butler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Butler, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY N. HUGGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1678) for the relief of Henry N. Huggins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Henry N. Huggins, dependent father of Andrew P. Huggins, deceased, late a private in Company K, Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANTONIA B. LYNCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1630) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension now allowed Mrs. Antonia B. Lynch, widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, from twenty-five to fifty dollars per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 6, strike out "$50" and insert "$30."

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1630) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mrs. Antonia B. Lynch, widow of Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, was granted a pension at the rate of $25 per month, from October 11, 1884, the date of the officer's death. The rate granted is that of the widow of a lieutenant in the Navy, the rank held by the officer at the time of the incurrence of the fatal disease, according to the interpretation by the Pension Office of the evidence filed in support of the widow's claim.

Dominick Lynch was appointed a midshipman in the Navy February 2, 1829, promoted to passed midshipman July 3, 1835, to lieutenant September 8, 1841, to commander on the reserved-list July 21, 1861, to captain on the reserved-list April 4, 1867, to captain on the active-list January 20, 1871, and died at Brooklyn, N. Y., October 10, 1884.

During the late war he served on the Daylight, and later commanded the Bainbridge, the naval station at Beaufort, S. C., and the steamer Saint Lawrence, of the North Atlantic blockading squadron.

Dr. Henry N. Read, who attended the officer in his last illness, testifies that his death was due immediately to cerebral hemorrhage, depending upon intracranial rupture of artery, degenerated from attrenomatous deposit. His heart had been affected for years with valvular disease due to acute endocarditis, the origin of which was inflammatory rheumatism, brought on by exposure.

The report of the Navy Department of the medical history of this officer during nearly fifty years of service is unusually complete. From this it appears that he was under treatment for rheumatism seven days in 1847 and two days in 1851, but at no time thereafter.

The widow is over sixty years of age, and an invalid, having the care of a daughter physically unable to earn a support. Her only son, who contributed to the support of the claimant and her invalid daughter, has been taken from her recently by death, thus leaving her entirely dependent upon the small pension now paid to her by the Government.

For nearly forty years claimant has been the true and faithful wife of a gallant officer, who, as heretofore stated, has honorably served his country for a half century on sea and land. Her present pension is entirely inadequate for her support and the maintenance of a physically disabled daughter, and therefore comes to Congress for relief, asking that her pension be increased from $25 to $50 per month, in order that she may be able to retain the station in life in which her late husband's official position has placed her.

There are several precedents to which your committee desire to invite attention, in cases no more meritorious, or entitled to more favorable consideration than the one at issue. The widow of Maj. Levi Twiggs, of the Marine Corps (relative rank with that of lieutenant in the Navy), was granted an increase from $25 to $50 per month by a recent Congress; as was also the widow of Capt. John Gallagher, United States Navy, and in the Forty-seventh Congress a bill passed giving the widow of Frederick Collins, United States Navy, an increase from $25 to $40 per month.

Recent action on the part of the House in similar cases, however, is deemed by your committee sufficient to indicate that such precedents should no longer govern us in the consideration of bills asking for rates of pension in excess of those provided by the general law, and therefore must decline to grant the rate asked for in the bill under consideration; but believing that the cause of the officer's death originated after he became a captain instead of being traceable to the slight attacks of rheumatism, from which he is shown to have suffered many years previously and while holding the rank of lieutenant, we are of opinion that the claimant is entitled to the pension provided for the widow of a captain in the Navy, namely, $30 per month, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty," in line 6, and inserting instead thereof the word "thirty;" and thus amended, be passed.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ERDMUTHE KIRCHNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5931) granting a pension to Erdmuthe Kirchner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Erdmuthe Kirchner, dependent mother of Carl Kirchner, late a private in Company G, Twenty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BISHOP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6688) for the relief of William Bishop.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and instructed to place the name of William Bishop, late a private in Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH A. ROBBINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth A. Robbins, mother of William Henry Robbins, deceased, late a private in Company E, Seventh Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM J. HEADY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5635) granting a pension to William J. Heady.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William J. Heady on the pension-roll, for gallant and meritorious services in the Mexican war, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Pensions recommended an amendment inserting after the name "Heady," in the body of the bill, the words "as captain," so as to make it read: "To place the name of William J. Heady as captain on the pension-roll," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report in that case read.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, if my friend from Pennsylvania will hear a brief statement I am sure he will not question the justice and propriety of this proposed legislation.

Captain Heady is well known to the State of Kentucky. In the prime of young manhood he responded to the call of his country in the war with Mexico. The record of his gallant services is a part, and a noble part, of the history of his country. After serving with bravery and distinguished ability, facing death upon many a field of danger, he was captured by the enemy, and for nine months lingered in a loathsome dungeon. But, without attempting to recapitulate all the services of Captain Heady as a soldier, I desire to say that they were well known then and have been recognized since by his fellow-citizens, who have honored him with their confidence by elevating him to distinguished positions in her legislative councils.

Now, sir, after a long and honorable life, he finds himself in his old age broken in fortune and in health, without means, but not without friends. I say not without friends, for I hold in my hand a petition in his behalf signed by several hundred of the worthiest and best citizens of my district—lawyers, physicians, judges, and merchants—in which they say:

His advanced age, want of health, eminent services and sufferings during nine months' imprisonment in the Mexican war, entitle him to a liberal pension that he may live comfortably for the balance of his life.

Captain Heady is now, Mr. Chairman, an old man, past three score years and ten. Shall we not—shall not the Government which he has so faithfully served, give from its abundance this little pittance, that his declining years may be free from care and want?

I submit this question with full confidence that it will be favorably responded to.

Mr. SWOPE. I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LEWIS W. SCANLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3043) granting a pension to Lewis W. Scanland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lewis W. Scanland, late of Colonel Burbank's regiment of Illinois volunteers in the Black Hawk war.

The Committee on Pensions recommended amending the bill by striking out, in line 6, the name "Burbank's" and inserting the name "John Thomas's;" and inserting in line 7, after the word "regiment," the words "Captain Barnsback's company;" so as to make it read "Lewis W. Scanland, late of Col. John Thomas's regiment, Captain Barnsback's Company, &c."

The amendments were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PHŒBE H. MEECH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phœbe H. Meech, widow of Horace J. Meech, late a second lieutenant in the Second Regiment New York Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and to pay to her, from and after the passage of this act, a pension at the rate of $15 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to that bill. I opposed it in committee, and I would like to have the report read. I do not think there is a particle of evidence to sustain the claim.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech, respectfully submit the following report:

Phœbe C. Meech is the widow of Horace J. Meech, who was a soldier in the Mexican war, serving gallantly and faithfully. By the records of the adjutant-general's office at Albany, N. Y., he is shown to have been commissioned second lieutenant in the First Regiment Volunteers on the 19th day of February, 1848, with rank from that date. Also, the same fact is shown by quite a number of witnesses. Whether he was mustered or served as a second lieutenant is not clear. He was honorably discharged on the 28th day of June, 1848. He applied for a pension, but died in 1851, before receiving the same. The applicant was pensioned in 1875, but only from that date and only at the rate of $8 per month.

From all the facts in the case your committee are of the opinion that she is entitled to receive pension as a widow of a second lieutenant. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, there is no proof to show that that officer, if he was an officer, ever served as such, and that is my ground of objection to the bill. We asked the gentleman who reported the bill, and he said that the records, even the records in the office at Albany, did not establish the fact that this man was ever mustered in or served as a lieutenant. There was simply some indefinite testimony by outside parties.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of Mr. WHITE, of the Committee on Pensions, who reported that bill, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed by informally, and be permitted to retain its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

REBECCA REESE M'KEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6323) granting a pension to Rebecca McGee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca McGee, the widow of Captain McGee, a soldier of the war of 1812, at the rate of $25 per month.

The Committee on Pensions recommended amendments striking out, in line 6, the name "Rebecca McGee" and inserting "Rebecca Reese McKee;" striking out, in line 7, the name "McGee" and inserting "John McKee," and changing the title so as to read, "A bill granting a pension to Rebecca Reese McKee."

The amendments were agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration, under the special order of the House, business upon the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report to the House sundry bills with various recommendations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know how it is, when every vote here to-night has disclosed the fact that we have no quorum present, that this committee has been able to rise. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I am asked the question by a friend on my left if I am going to ask a separate vote upon the bill granting an increase of pension to the widow of General Birney. I desire to say to the House in connection with that inquiry, in order to set myself right before the House, that I did announce the determination to object to the passage of that bill until there should be a quorum present to act upon it. I made that announcement because I believed it was wrong to pass the bill, and I believed it was proper for me to interpose every objection that the law would permit to defeat its passage. I think so yet.

But it is one of a series of bills, three or four hundred in number, all more or less meritorious, and it has been announced by another gentleman upon this floor that he intends to take advantage of that circumstance to call for a quorum in every case—a course of action which must necessarily be fatal to each and all of these bills. I can not afford, Mr. Speaker, right as I am in my position, to defeat this objectionable bill by furnishing a pretext—a flimsy pretext—upon which to break down these other bills, the merits of which no man on this floor doubts. Therefore, I now state that I have reconsidered the determination which I announced a while ago to raise the question of a quorum on the passage of the Birney bill.

I will refrain from raising that question in the interest of harmony and in order that these other meritorious bills in which so many gentlemen on this floor and so many soldiers are interested may have proper recognition. [Applause.]

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 7156 be laid aside for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the Clerk reaches the bill indicated that action can be taken.

The Clerk began to read the title of the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment.

Mr. BRAGG. One moment. Mr. Speaker, I desire that the bills be taken in their order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will be called in their order under the rule. The Clerk is now, in accordance with the usual practice, reporting first the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment. After those are disposed of, the bills that have been reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments will be taken up in their order. That has been the invariable rule.

Mr. BRAGG. I want to understand the proposition made by the gentleman who requested that a certain bill be laid aside. I want to know what it is.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BRAGG. The regular order does not prevent me from addressing an inquiry to the Chair as to what the proposition was in regard to laying a certain bill aside——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin on the left?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was that a separate vote be had on House bill No. 7156.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I will state my proposition when that bill is reached.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair advises the gentleman from Tennessee that he will have the right when that bill is reached to ask a separate vote.

The Clerk read the titles of the following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar without amendment and with the recommendation that they do pass:

A bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley;
A bill (H. R. 4032) granting a pension to John McGowan;

A bill (H. R. 7617) granting a pension to Solomon J. Grissom;
A bill (H. R. 5174) granting a pension to Mrs. M. A. Lewis;
A bill (H. R. 2800) granting a pension to Mary Manes;
A bill (H. R. 8085) granting a pension to Amos C. Weeden;
A bill (H. R. 7168) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie Ancrum;

A bill (H. R. 5931) granting a pension to Erdmuthe Kirchner;
A bill (H. R. 6688) for the relief of William Bishop;
A bill (H. R. 426) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Robbins;

When the bill in the foregoing list (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney, was reached,

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR said: I desire a separate vote on this bill. The custom has been heretofore to pass these bills in gross where no objection has been made. But I will wait till we come to the question of final passage.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to laying the bill aside.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As there is objection——

Mr. HATCH. The Chair did not hear the remark of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR], who said that he withdrew any objection to the engrossment and third reading of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] objected to laying the bill aside.

Mr. HATCH. But the gentleman from Tennessee withdrew the request that the bill be laid aside. There is no objection to the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the titles as above recited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bills which have been read by their titles will be considered as engrossed and read a third time. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered. Did the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw the demand for a separate vote on House bill No. 7156?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I would like to have a separate vote on the passage of that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us vote on that first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will first put the question on the passage of the bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Mrs. Antoinette Birney.

Mr. BRADY. Does it require unanimous consent to take this bill up out of its regular order? If it does, I object, because I desire that before we reach that bill we may pass other bills which have been engrossed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Virginia objects, the bills will have to be taken up in their order until we reach that bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask a separate vote on the passage of each bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first bill in order is the bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley.

Mr. TAULBEE. In view of the possibility of the question of no quorum being made—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] I wish to submit——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TAULBEE. In order to obviate the necessity of a separate vote on each bill, which I think will unnecessarily consume time——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no more to say,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of House bill No. 576.

Mr. BRAGG. I believe I have the floor; have I not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. BRAGG. I only desire to say that if the understanding is there is to be no call for a quorum on any of these bills, I do not desire that they shall be voted on separately.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is the proposition I wished to submit in order to obviate the consumption of time.

Mr. BRAGG. But if the purpose of the gentleman who desires a separate vote on the bill for the relief of Mrs. Birney is to raise the question of no quorum, we may as well meet the question now as later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Chair might be permitted to make a suggestion——

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. If the gentleman from Wisconsin wants to call for a quorum, he can do it; I have no objection.

Mr. BRAGG. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I will answer it. When we get to your bill I will make the motion I desire to make.

Mr. BRAGG. All right.

Mr. BYNUM. I hope gentlemen will let this little bill pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin require a separate vote on each of the bills?

Mr. BRAGG. I require a separate vote on each bill, and I announce that I shall call for a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill (H. R. 576) for the relief of Louisa C. Beezeley.

Mr. BYNUM. I demand the previous question on the passage of that bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That is not necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 26, noes 0.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to, there being—ayes 6, noes 18.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I heard the statement of the Chair correctly in submitting the question to the House on which a division was called, it stated it was on the passage of the bill. Now, is it not a fact the question really was on ordering the previous question? The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill, and of course that had first to be disposed of before the question could be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BYNUM. The previous question I understood was treated as though it had been ordered, no objection having been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman insist on his demand for the previous question?

Mr. BYNUM. I did demand the previous question, and now insist upon it as the point has been made.

Mr. BRAGG. What is the point now particularly before the House?

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point of order that the division of the House which took place was out of order, because the previous question was called for by the gentleman from Indiana, while the question submitted to the House was on the passage of the bill. The division ought to have been upon ordering the previous question, which was demanded by the gentleman from Indiana. As I have stated already, the Chair put the question to the House as being on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is well taken, and the question ought to have been stated to the House on ordering the demand for the previous question. The Chair will now submit that question.

Mr. BRAGG. I demand a division on that vote.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order, that the Chair announced the vote before the gentleman called for a division.

Mr. RANDALL. He could not make demand for a division until he knew by the statement of the Chair how he believed the vote had gone.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes none.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BRADY. In regard to the question of a quorum it seems to me the position of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] is misunderstood. I understood him to state in my presence he did not intend to raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Then why does he not state it himself?

Mr. BRADY. I understand he has stated it on the floor of the House.

Mr. HATCH. Nobody has heard it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. The gentleman from Virginia misapprehended me. I have not stated whether I would or would not call for a quorum.

Mr. BRADY. I understood you to say you would not raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I said I wanted a separate vote on that particular bill, and my object in doing so, as gentlemen can easily understand, was to have it go over until we had a full House. I have never yet called a quorum on any bill in these Friday sessions. The precedent was set by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in reference to bills in which I was interested, not by virtue of being the author of them, but because I had reported them. Those bills, because of the point of no quorum having been made upon them, were postponed until they could be voted upon in a full House.

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as the precedent for calling for a quorum is concerned, I believe I express the sentiment of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions when I say that in concert he and others agreed the legislation under consideration should not proceed further until those cases were decided in a full House. That was agreed to that we would decide those pension cases of the nature to which the gentleman from Tennessee has referred by a vote in a full House.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Why not let these bills in like manner go over to be voted on in a full House?

Mr. TAULBEE. So far as I am concerned, having been in sympathy with the movement on the part of the chairman, I am not willing to make the point of no quorum and so obstruct legislation. I am quite satisfied if the chairman were present he would not make the point. But, so far as referring the question to a full House is concerned, if that be the wish of the members here present I am willing to agree to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I make my motion again, that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been made on ordering the previous question, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. BRAGG and Mr. BYNUM.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes none.

Mr. BRAGG. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does it not require a jury to order a call of the House?

Mr. BRAGG. No; but it requires a quorum to be present before you can get on further with this business.

Mr. TAULBEE. It has become perfectly apparent no legislation can be had here to-night unless gentlemen on the one side and the other can come to some agreement, and as there seems to be no indication on the part of those insisting on calling for a quorum, I move the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRAGG. You can not take a recess when no quorum is present.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask whether the differences can not be arbitrated under the new bill?

Mr. BRAGG. Perhaps they may be as soon as the new bill passes. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; at least I think it is such.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If a resistless body come in contact with an immovable body what will the consequence be? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRADY. An all-night session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not feel called upon to answer.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that we now take up the Birney bill and take a vote upon it.

Mr. McCOMAS. I object.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to inquire if it is in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. PETERS. Then I move a call of the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. Pending that motion, I move that the House adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The motion for a call of the House was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 3, noes 21.

Mr. BRADY. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would a motion to take a recess be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then I won't make it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of a quorum, I ask unanimous consent that the pairs be reported and considered as present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request can not be entertained.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the Birney bill first. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee will not object to that now.

Mr. BYNUM. I object. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. BYNUM. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7156) to increase the pension of Antoinette Birney, widow of Maj. Gen. David B. Birney.

The SPEAKER. This bill having been read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, the question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore decided that by the sound the ayes seemed to prevail.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I wanted to make a motion in reference to that bill. I understand the Chair to say that the bill is passed. Now, I wanted to move to lay it aside with the previous question upon it to be taken up and considered in a full House.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has announced the vote, that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Then I call for a division.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask consent that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee be submitted to the House, and I understand that he will abide by the result of the vote.

Mr. ZACK. TAYLOR. Unless that motion is entertained I shall object to the passage of the bill without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What motion?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I insist that a motion be entertained that this bill be laid over with the previous question upon it to be referred to a full House.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order for the gentleman from Tennessee to move to postpone the consideration of this bill until a day certain, say to-morrow? That will reach what he desires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Then I make that motion, that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What time to-morrow?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I understand that an order was made that a certain bill was to come up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow. If so, I would make the motion to postpone until Monday immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 7, noes 18.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill; and on a division there were—ayes 18, noes, 4.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. On that I ask a separate vote.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a demand for the previous question upon the other bills?

Mr. BRADY. I withdraw that and ask to proceed in the usual way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there a separate vote demanded upon any other bills?

Several MEMBERS. No.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2156) for the relief of John Randolph Hamilton, of the State of North Carolina, was read the third time, and passed (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 24, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPENSES FOR SEAMEN AT LIVERPOOL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State of an appropriation for expense of shipping and discharging seamen at Liverpool for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR ARMY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War, with inclosure, asking that the sum of $200,000 of the appropriation for pay, &c., for the Army for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, be transferred to the same appropriation for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JACKSON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BENNETT, for ten days, on account of important business, including to-day.

MAGDALENA REHKOPF.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 3351) granting a pension to Mrs. Magdalena Rehkopf was concurred in. The Senate amendment simply changed a letter in the name; and it appears the bill was correct in the first instance.

The SPEAKER. This was an amendment correcting, as was supposed, an error in the name of the pensioner. It was ascertained on examination that the name as the bill passed the House was correct. If there be no objection, the vote will be reconsidered, and the House will non-concur in the Senate amendment.

There was no objection.

BUSINESS OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday and Wednesday, the 1st and 2d days of June, immediately after the morning hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions, be set apart for the consideration of such business as may be reported and called up by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills, nor with prior orders, nor with the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Lands, under the special order. And if the consideration of such business shall be displaced, then the next days not previously set apart shall be devoted to the consideration of the same until it shall be disposed of, or until two days shall have been consumed, subject to the above-mentioned interference.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER OHIO RIVER.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7938) to authorize the Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railway and Bridge Company to erect a bridge across the Ohio River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railway, Transfer and Bridge Company, and its successors or assigns, are hereby authorized and empowered to erect a bridge across the Ohio River between Covington, Ky., and Cincinnati, Ohio, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the general law regulating the construction of bridges over the Ohio River: Provided, however, That said bridge shall not be of less elevation than the Covington and Cincinnati suspension bridge, and may be constructed without a pivot draw-span.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether there is not power enough under the general law to construct this bridge without a special act? I reserve the right to object until the gentleman makes an explanation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. The general law provides for a 500-foot opening between the piers over the main channel and requires a "pivot draw-span." This bridge is to be as high as the suspension bridge, and the proof before the committee shows that it is sufficiently high not to impede navigation, and there is no necessity for the "pivot draw."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the general law as to bridging the Ohio River, I wish to inquire what is the necessity for the passage of this bill?

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. The bill provides that the bridge may be constructed without a "pivot draw." It is to be as high as the suspension bridge, and there is proof before the committee that the suspension bridge is no impediment to navigation. This is a unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. After the explanation of the gentleman from Nebraska, I make no objection.

There being no objection, the bill was brought before the House for consideration; and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

E. P. THOMPSON.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 570) for the relief of E. P. Thompson, and that the same be passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to E. P. Thompson, assistant postmaster at Indianapolis, Ind., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $338, for postage-stamps and postal cards stolen and destroyed February 1, 1881, for which he was held liable by the postmaster and paid said amount.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask my friend from Indiana if this case does not fall within the general law?

Mr. BYNUM. The Postmaster-General held that this case did not fall within the law, the stamps having been stolen and then destroyed. The law covers those stolen and also those burned; but the Department held that as these stamps were first stolen and then burned the law did not cover the case, and this party failed to obtain relief. The case, therefore, had to be referred to Congress for its action by a special bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYNUM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The regular order is, under the prior order of the House, the consideration of such bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as may be called up or indicated by that committee.

Mr. BRAGG. During the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas; and I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of section 533 of the Revised Statutes as provides that Howard, Little River, and Sevier Counties shall be embraced in the western judicial district of Arkansas be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and the said counties are hereby added to and placed in the eastern judicial district of said State; and all process issued against defendants residing therein shall be returned to Little Rock until otherwise provided, and all causes of action which have accrued or may hereafter accrue in said counties of which the courts of the United States have jurisdiction shall be cognizable in the court at Little Rock until otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 2. That all actions or proceedings now pending against parties residing in either of said counties in the court for the said western district may, on the application of either party, be transferred to the court for the eastern district at Little Rock; and in case of such transfer, all papers and files therein, with copies of all record entries, shall be transferred to the office of the clerk of such court; and the same shall proceed in all respects as though originally commenced in said court at Little Rock.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply seeks the convenience of the people of these three counties. It is acquiesced in as necessary by the members of the Arkansas delegation and approved by the unanimous report of the committee.

I trust that no time will be taken up in the discussion of it—in fact, I do not think any one wishes to discuss it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERKS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, CALIFORNIA, OREGON, AND NEVADA.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 3593) to repeal section 840 and to amend section 839 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section numbered 840 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That section 839 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 839. No clerk of a district court or clerk of a circuit court shall be allowed by the Attorney-General, except as provided in section 842, to retain of the fees and emoluments of his office, or in case both of the said clerkships are held by the same person, of the fees and emoluments of said offices, respectively, for his personal compensation, over and above his necessary office expenses, including necessary clerk-hire, to be audited and allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, a sum exceeding $3,500 a year for any such district clerk or for any such circuit clerk, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year."

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had House bill 3593 under consideration, beg leave to report:

That section 840 of the Revised Statutes provides that the clerks of the several circuit and district courts in California, Oregon, and Nevada shall be allowed double fees. This bill proposes to repeal that section, and to so amend section 839 that those officers shall receive the same compensation as is provided for the clerks of like courts in other States.

Whatever reasons once existed for the additional allowance to clerks of these courts have ceased to exist, and your committee recommend the passage of said bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There is a general impression in the minds of members that this bill has reference to the fees of the clerks of United States courts generally. It refers only to the clerks of the courts in California and Nevada. The statute originally, and until now, provided that those clerks should have double fees. This is to repeal section 840 of the United States Statutes, which makes that provision, and to conform section 839 to the fact. With that understanding there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does this bill make any provision for the compensation of deputies of the clerks of these United States courts?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It does not change the law in that respect.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then they are left to be covered by the general law.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; the same as now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This puts the clerks of the courts to which it relates upon the same footing with the clerks of the United States courts in other States.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EZRA. B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBBERY IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 4849) to punish robbery in the Indian Territory; and I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every person who commits any robbery in the Indian Territory shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to apply to any offense committed by one Indian upon the person or property of another Indian, or so as to repeal any former act in relation to robbing the mails or any person of property belonging to the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the report:

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration bill H. R. 4849, respectfully submit the following report:

There are statutes of the United States punishing the robbing of the mails and the robbing of persons of property belonging to the United States, and also in a few other instances robbery is punishable under existing law. It is not intended by this bill to interfere in any way with any existing statutes relating to the crime of robbery.

There is no statute punishing robbery in the Indian country, except as stated. This crime is not unfrequently committed in that country. Sometimes the railroad trains are stopped, and the railroad companies and express companies and passengers robbed, and the perpetrators can only be punished under the general statute for larceny, the maximum punishment of which is $1,000 fine and one year's imprisonment. This punishment the committee think incommensurate with the character of offenses stated. The surrounding States have found it necessary to punish this offense much more severely, and the committee think a severer punishment should be inflicted for this class of crimes when committed in the Indian Territory, where lawless and bad men have congregated in great numbers.

Your committee therefore urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that report, I assume, is a sufficient explanation of the reasons for the passage of this bill. Therefore, if no gentleman desires to put any question or to discuss the matter, I move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HORSE-STEALING IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 5188) prescribing the punishment of horse-stealing in the Indian Territory, and yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whoever shall be convicted in any court of the United States of stealing any horse, mare, gelding, filly, foal, or mule, and where said theft is shown to have been committed in the Indian Territory, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment not more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That this act shall not affect or apply to any prosecution now pending or the prosecution of any offense already committed.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That said acts shall remain in force for the punishment of all persons who have heretofore committed the crime of larceny.

Mr. ROGERS. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ROGERS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration House bill 3858, recommend the accompanying bill as a substitute therefor.

Section 5356 of the Revised Statutes of the United States prescribes the punishment for larceny. The maximum punishment is $1,000 fine and one year's imprisonment. This has been found inadequate to suppress horse-stealing in the Indian Territory. The States surrounding that country have found it necessary to inflict much severer punishment—the maximum punishment in one State, and perhaps others, being fifteen years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. The result is, the horse-thief follows his vocation in the Territory. It is believed the passage of this bill will go far toward deterring his operations in that country.

The committee therefore urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. The report explains the object of this bill, and, unless some one desires further explanation, I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 5189) limiting the time for the presentation and payment of claims against the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all claims for back pay or bounty due to officers, soldiers, or to any other persons for services in the late civil war, or any previous war, shall be presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, or other proper tribunal, for adjustment and payment, within four years after the passage of this act; and all other existing claims against the United States, excepting claims for pensions, shall be presented within four years from the passage of this act; and all claims against the United States originating hereafter shall be presented within six years from the time they originate to the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, or other proper tribunal, for settlement and payment. No claim shall be acted upon or paid unless presented within the time herein named. In computing the years of limitation herein fixed no time shall be included when the person entitled to present the claim shall be a lunatic, a minor, or under any other legal disability: Provided, That the claims herein mentioned shall not be construed to include the accounts of paymasters or disbursing officers, or other persons disbursing money or accountable to the United States for property: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to revive any claim now barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. TUCKER. On behalf of the committee, I move to amend the bill by striking out "originating," in line 11, and inserting "accruing;" so as to make the clause read, "and all claims against the United States accruing hereafter shall be presented within six years," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEACH. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether, in his opinion, this bill will amount to anything; whether it will be effectual to accomplish the purpose in view?

Mr. TUCKER. I will say to the gentleman from New York and other members of the House that this bill was prepared two years ago by Judge Ferriss, who was then the Second Auditor of the Treasury. There is accompanying the report a statement made by the present Auditor of the Treasury, commending the bill as absolutely necessary for the transaction of the business of that Department. The Department is crowded with these claims, purporting to have originated at various dates. The purpose of this bill is that, so far as concerns any claim against the Government before the Departments, there shall be this limitation. If the party, notwithstanding this limitation, has a good claim, let him come before Congress or go before the Court of Claims, under a bill which has been before this House. We think it wise that, so far as these Departments are concerned, there shall be this limitation on the presentation and payment of these claims.

Mr. BEACH. The gentleman does not answer my question. I desire to know whether this bill will operate as a statute of limitations and prevent the introduction of bills in future Congresses.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. TUCKER. It will not.

Mr. BEACH. Then in this connection I desire to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether there was not referred to his committee a resolution introduced by myself proposing an amendment to the Constitution so as to establish a statute of limitations against claims of this character?

Mr. TUCKER. And that will be acted upon in due time.

Mr. BEACH. I am sorry to hear that, because "due time" means no time at all.

Mr. TUCKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; with the Judiciary Committee it means always the right time.

Mr. BEACH. With the Judiciary Committee it is the fact that "Man never is, but always to be blest."

Mr. TUCKER. No, sir; we are blessing you to-day. [Laughter.]

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIVIL JURISDICTION IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the bill (H. R. 5545) conferring civil jurisdiction in certain cases arising in the Indian Territory on the United States courts which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over said Territory; and I yield the floor to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the courts of the United States which now or may hereafter exercise criminal jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, or any part thereof, or over any Indian reservation, under the provisions of any statute of the United States, shall have and exercise civil jurisdiction also within the limits of the judicial district in which said courts are held: Provided, That this act shall not be so construed as to vest said courts with jurisdiction over controversies between Indians.

SEC. 2. That all original mesne and final process issued by any United States court which now has or may hereafter have criminal jurisdiction in the Indian Territory shall extend to and be executed in said Territory in like manner as in the district from which the process issued.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the chambers of commerce and other public bodies in nearly all the States surrounding the Indian Territory have memorialized Congress for the establishment of civil jurisdiction over that Territory. In the early part of this session I introduced a bill on this subject, which was referred to the Judiciary Committee. That committee has given to this subject as full, careful, and mature consideration as can be bestowed by the committee on any subject; and the committee has reported this bill as meeting the requirements of the case so far as, in the opinion of the committee, they could be met. The report is unanimous; and, unless there is some occasion for discussion, I will, in view of the importance of other measures to be called up by the committee, consume no further time. I ask the House to pass the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM L. DUNLOP, TRUSTEE.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 79) for the relief of William L. Dunlop, trustee; and I yield the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS].

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the United States, in favor of the said William L. Dunlop, of the District of Columbia, as trustee of the estate of George Lowry, late of said District, deceased, his heirs and assigns, hereby surrender, abandon, and forever release all right or claim they may have, by reason of any escheat, to part of lot numbered 13, in square numbered 75, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, as the same is known and distinguished on the plan or plat of said city, and included in the following lines and bounds, to wit: Beginning for the same at a point on the line of the southwest side of Pennsylvania avenue 79 feet 3 inches from the stone planted at the northwest corner of the square, and running thence along the line of Pennsylvania avenue toward said corner-stone 20 feet; thence at right angles to the avenue back to an alley 9 feet wide, heretofore laid off in a lease to Thomas Y. Sprogell; thence with the line of said alley due east till it intersects with said Sprogell's line; thence with said Sprogell's line to the place of beginning, with the free use and privilege of the said alley of 9 feet in width, and with the brick dwelling-house and buildings thereon.

The SPEAKER. This resolution appears to be for the benefit of a private individual, and has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COLLINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and that it be now considered in the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly; and the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

An amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, to insert before the words "part of lot," in line 8, the word "any," was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISPUTED HANDWRITING EVIDENCE.

Mr. RANNEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, moved to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7212) providing for evidence in cases involving disputed handwriting.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken up and read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases, civil or criminal, comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANNEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDGMENTS AND DECREES, UNITED STATES COURTS.

On motion of Mr. TUCKER, the House Calender was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2497) to regulate the effects of judgments and decrees of courts of the United States in the several States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall take effect, by way of lien or otherwise, to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State: Provided, however, That whenever, by the laws of any State, judgments and decrees rendered in the courts thereof are made to depend for their effect, as liens or otherwise, upon the docketing, registry of the same, or upon any other requirement of law, the same shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize them to be docketed or registered, or compliance with any other of said requirements, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State: Provided, however, That ninety days from the rendition of any judgment or decree of said courts of the United States hereafter rendered, or from the passage of this act as to any such judgment or decree heretofore rendered, be allowed to any party for compliance with the laws of any State as to the docketing or registry, or other requirements relating to judgments and decrees of the courts thereof; and such compliance shall be held sufficient to give full effect thereto according to said laws, anything to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That in all other respects the judgments and decrees of the said courts of the United States shall be enforced and carried into effect according to the laws of said State as if they were rendered in the courts of said State.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith be, and are hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the second section, as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all other respects the judgments and decrees of the said courts of the United States shall be enforced and carried into effect according to the laws of said State as if they were rendered in the courts of said State."

Mr. BUCHANAN. This is a bill affecting judgments and decrees of the Federal courts, and the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary seems to be of some importance. I hope, therefore, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will state the effect of the bill and proposed amendment.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I will make a short statement of the purpose of the bill and what I consider its effect. As the law now stands, Federal judgments in a State have the same effect by law as judgments in a State. The House will find by referring to the original statute that the statute refers to the law of the State at the time of the passage of the United States law, or any subsequent law which shall be passed by the State. The consequence is, there is lack of uniformity in the operation of judgments of the Federal courts and those of the State courts.

Of late years in my own State and in many others it has become an abuse that the effect of a judgment as a lien is only from the time it is docketed upon what we call the judgment docket as against a purchaser for value without notice. I understand the same law has been passed in a great many other States. The consequence is, as the Federal judgment is left without such docket because the State law does not allow Federal judgments to be docketed, this proposes the Federal judgments shall stand upon the same basis as a lien as a State judgment by being docketed if the State law permits it to be docketed. Therefore the bill provides Federal judgment in States notwithstanding they shall not be docketed shall become liens unless and until the State shall pass a law authorizing the docketing of Federal judgments as well as State judgments.

Then the other question raised before the committee, and which is as I understand to be the subject of amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, is this, which is, I think, a fair question for the consideration of the House: If a judgment is rendered to-day in a Federal court at common law it would be a lien in every State by virtue of its rendition; but as the law now stands it will not be a lien in any other county than where it is rendered unless it is docketed. The effect of that is where a man, who purchased property upon which the judgment would be a lien, would get a good title if it were not docketed in that county.

Mr. STRUBLE. As it is now.

Mr. TUCKER. But it seemed to the committee it was fair in case of Federal judgments, which were now a lien all over the State, that the judgment creditor should have a short time, and we have given ninety days to docket his judgment in various portions of the State. Otherwise the judgment debtor might make an alienation of his property to some purchaser for value. We therefore, as I have said, have given ninety days for that purpose. That has been done in my own State, and I understand it has been done in a great many other States.

The only question is whether there shall be any time allowed the judgment creditor to docket his judgment in the different counties of the State, or whether it shall be only a lien from the time it is docketed.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not understand exactly what is meant by the word "docketed" in this connection.

Mr. OATES. It should be docketed or registered.

Mr. TUCKER. The language of the bill is docketed, registered, or any other requirement, as the case may be. This was done because I did not know in preparing this what the requirements in some of the States were in that regard.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Suppose the amendment of the committee to this bill is adopted. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia what effect would that have upon the rights of the purchaser who purchases the property between the time of the rendition of the judgment and the docketing of the judgment?

Mr. TUCKER. If there was no judgment docketed the purchaser would be protected.

Mr. REAGAN. Just at this point let me interrupt the gentleman from Virginia. This is a very important part of the bill and needs careful consideration. I would like to know——

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Virginia has not answered my question; I mean, what is the protection of the purchaser who purchases after the rendition of the judgment and within the ninety days? Would he secure a clear title to the property or not?

Mr. TUCKER. If ninety days are allowed it will relate back to the date of the judgment.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that judgment liens run for ninety days; by this provision, and that being the case, there is no notice to the purchaser within the ninety days, and if he purchased within that time he might lose his property or his money.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is just the point I am making, and is one that should be carefully guarded. The provision may be in the bill, but if so I have not seen it.

Mr. TUCKER. I think, sir, that I will not compliment the committee, but it is only proper to say that the bill is carefully drawn in every respect and is well guarded upon every point except, perhaps, the particular one to which the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa relates.

Mr. REAGAN. Will you yield to me a moment?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to call the attention of the House to that provision of this bill which gives effect to a judgment outside of the county in which the record is made for a term of ninety days before it is recorded, and to ask the House to consider what the effect of that provision will be. It is apparent that if a judgment is rendered in any particular county in a State by the Federal court, if the judgment lien takes effect from that particular date and continues in effect for ninety days until it can be recorded in another county, you will see its effect will be that any one purchasing that property, in however good faith, at any time within the three months would be likely to lose his money. He would have no record evidence, and would purchase without any constructive notice, though purchasing in good faith, and yet this would have the effect of taking his money from him. That can not be right.

I do not know how it is generally in other States, but in my State the judgment of the court is a lien in the county in which the judgment is rendered after the date of its rendition and in any other county from the date of the record; and it becomes a constructive lien upon the property from that date. So that by this provision of our law no one can be defrauded by purchasing under the provision of our law without a constructive notice.

It seems to me we should not lay a trap to enable the fraudulent debtor, if he sees proper to do so, to sell his property in fraud of the creditor or the purchaser. He would have actual notice that his property was in danger, but that notice does not protect the man who in good faith should purchase the property in that time, so that it is obvious it would give the fraudulent debtor, if he chooses to swindle any person out of the price of the property, the period of three months to do so; and I trust, therefore, the committee will admit an amendment to perfect the bill in that regard.

Mr. TUCKER. I would like to say a word, Mr. Speaker, on this point, as I may have been misunderstood, or may not have fully explained the provision of the bill in question.

This bill does not make any new law in reference to liens of judgment. It simply gives to the Federal judgment the same lien, and none other, that it would have if the judgment were rendered in a State court. I understand in Vermont, the State of my friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. STEWART], that a judgment is no lien upon land at all. Is not that so? This bill does not propose to make it a lien in Vermont. It simply says that the judgment shall have the same effect, by way of lien, if rendered in a Federal court that it would have if rendered in a State court; or if the State law requires, in order to the validity and efficiency of the lien, that it shall be docketed, registered, or any other requirement, that that requisition shall not be made of the judgment creditor in the Federal court unless the State law permits the creditor to docket the lien and judgment.

Mr. REAGAN. But does it not have the effect of giving, within the ninety days, to the fraudulent debtor the opportunity of swindling the purchaser of the property?

Mr. SYMES. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia if the judgments in the Federal courts in the States are not now, in effect, the same as judgments in the State courts?

Mr. TUCKER. I will answer my friend from Texas by saying that it may be in some States that the lien is only a lien from the end of ninety days. If so, the bill does not make it otherwise.

But I would say, in the State of Virginia the lien goes back to the date of the judgment if it is docketed any time within the ninety days, and that would be the effect of this bill, if it passes, on all judgments in the Federal courts of Virginia.

Mr. HOLMES. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia who pays the expense of this indexing of the judgment?

Mr. TUCKER. The judgment creditor.

Mr. OATES. The bill does not create any lien at all?

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all.

Mr. OATES. It only provides for the registration of judgments and decrees, whereby under the State laws there is a lien.

Mr. TUCKER. In other words, and I want to be distinctly understood, the whole effect of the bill is to make uniform the effect on liens of judgments in the Federal and State courts; it is to make them uniform according to State law. But we provided in this case—and that is the point to which the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa will be presented—we provided in this case that as the Federal judgment creditor had a lien all over the State without any limitation, without even the limitation of requiring it to be docketed, we said we will require you to docket it if the State law requires it; but we will give you ninety days, and the only question is whether that period of ninety days will be allowed or not.

Mr. BAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose the State law allows an exemption of $1,000, would not the effect of this be to reduce the lien obtained in the Federal court $1,000?

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all. On the contrary, the second section of the bill originally seemed to lean in that direction, and for fear it would injure the lien we struck out the second section.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the previous question is called I want to enter a motion to strike out the proviso beginning at line 17 of the first section.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he has any objection to fixing the time at sixty days instead of ninety days?

Mr. TUCKER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR].

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The object of this bill is not to make a new lien or to enforce more rigidly the old one. It is solely for the benefit and convenience of the people. A lien can be obtained now on real estate in most of the districts to the extent of the district, and commences the moment the judgment is entered and docketed. This provides a way whereby the knowledge of those judgments and liens may be brought home to each county and district. This bill provides when the State passes such laws as to authorize the docketing of the judgments of the United States courts in the various counties, so that the people can go to their own county seats and know what liens are entered there coming down from the district courts for the convenience of the judgment creditor he may have ninety days in which that docketing in the State court may take place. If that is not done the judgment remains still a lien, if this law is not passed, during that ninety days, and that is not to the disadvantage of the creditor. But if this law should be so changed because of amendments as to interfere with the lien during the ninety days, then the creditor has lost what he now has, a lien during the critical ninety days, and by the alienation of the property to which the lien should attach the ends of justice are defeated.

Mr. HISCOCK. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have you thought of this question, What effect the stay laws would have in reference to suspending the enforcement of a judgment, whether this law that you have here would open the judgments and decrees of a court of the United States to those laws?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. We did not have that point suggested in committee, and I am not prepared to answer definitely, although I may say that was not intended.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suppose not; but I ask you to look carefully at the language here, and see if possibly the effect of this language is not to make the judgment subject to the laws of the States respectively as to the time and manner of collection.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I should suppose it refers only to the matter of the lien and no other.

Mr. HISCOCK. The language is quite broad—

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall take effect by way of lien or otherwise—to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Or otherwise—

Now, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio whether the effect of this section is not to put all judgments and decrees of the United States courts under the State statutes in reference to the time and manner of their collection?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It was not so understood; but I can not answer the question further.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like the gentleman's judgment on it, as a lawyer, now.

Mr. BAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Suppose the State enacts a law authorizing the docketing or registering of judgments obtained in the United States courts in the several counties of the State, and suppose the judgment creditor in the Federal court fails to enter that of record, what then?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. He has no lien under this law.

Mr. BAYNE. It does not nullify the judgment?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It does not nullify the judgment; but there is no other law that gives a lien, and this lien is given conditional upon his doing that.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not see anything here that makes the judgment void or determines the lien.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There is no pretense of making it void, but there is no other law but this that makes the lien. The lien exists by reason of this law, and that is a condition of the law.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] whether this bill does not subordinate these Federal judgments to the State law with reference to the time when they can be collected.

Mr. TUCKER. Not at all, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have the gentleman read the language of the bill carefully.

Mr. LYMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] later, but I now yield the floor for a moment to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], that he may offer an amendment which he proposes.

Mr. LYMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in full accord with what is attempted to be reached by the provisions of this bill. Its object, as I understand it, is to make the judgments of Federal courts and the judgments of the State courts in the same State or district of the same effect; and it is for the reason that I think the bill does not entirely meet that purpose that I propose to offer an amendment, and will now offer it, if it be in order. The amendment is to strike out the last proviso of the first section of the bill, the portion of the section which provides that the judgment creditor shall have ninety days after the rendition of the judgment in which to file a transcript of his judgment in the various counties of the State. In Iowa we have a statute the substance of which I can repeat. It provides that the judgments of courts of record are liens upon real estate in the county within which they are rendered from the date of their rendition. They are not liens in any other county in the State until a transcript is filed in the county in which the land lies upon which it is sought to enforce the lien and docketed upon the judgment docket of that county. The inquiry is made by a gentleman near me whether the judgment is a lien anywhere until docketed. It is a lien in the county in which it is rendered from the date of its rendition, but in no other county until the transcript has been filed.

There are two objects to be met by this bill; at least I have two objects in view in supporting it, as I shall do if it shall be perfected so as to attain those objects. One is to protect the judgment creditor. The other is to protect those who may become bona fide purchasers of real estate. Now, if this ninety-day provision shall stand in the bill, then, when a party desires to obtain an abstract of the title to a piece of real estate in any particular county, he will be compelled to apply to the clerk of every Federal court in the State to ascertain whether within the past ninety days a judgment has been rendered against the defendant. It seems to me that that destroys the uniform operation of the Federal and State judgments. The State judgment is not a lien until it has been adopted, and why should the Federal judgment be a lien during those ninety days any more than the judgment of a State court? No relief is afforded, as I understand it, during those ninety days. There is no certainty about the title during that period. Let the judgment of the Federal court stand upon the same footing as the judgment of a State court.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], notwithstanding the passage of this bill, it would be just as necessary to examine the records of the Federal courts as it is now.

Mr. LYMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TUCKER. With this difference: At present, a party has to examine the dockets of the Federal courts for years and years back; but under this law his examination would be limited to ninety days.

Mr. CANNON. That does not furnish much relief.

Mr. LYMAN. We have a statute in Iowa providing for the docketing of these Federal judgments just like judgments in State courts; and the object of this bill being to make both classes of judgments of uniform operation, it appears to me that we meet it, not only in Iowa but in every State, by saying that the judgment of a Federal court in any particular district or State shall have exactly the same effect that a judgment of a State court has when the same proceeding shall have been taken. I think the object will be met by striking out the last proviso in the first section of the bill, and I now move that amendment.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Would not the gentleman be willing to modify his amendment so as to provide that the judgment of a Federal court should become a lien only from the date of docketing it in the various counties?

Mr. LYMAN. That is what I mean to do.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Then why not make it a little more definite?

Mr. LYMAN. I will modify my amendment so as to express that proposition clearly.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Speaker, it will never do to adopt this amendment. Should it be ingrafted upon the bill it would make it possible for a debtor, as soon as judgment was rendered against him and before it could be perfected and docketed in any county, to convey every foot of his real estate within the boundaries of that county, and thus put it beyond the reach of the judgment.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Is not the same proposition true with reference to judgments of the State courts now?

Mr. CASWELL. Why, Mr. Speaker, where judgments are rendered in a county by the State courts the judgment can be docketed almost instantly. In some cases it may be open for a day or two; but it can be perfected and docketed within a reasonable time. But as to the judgment of a Federal court located at some distance away, it might be impossible to perfect the judgment and send a transcript to the several counties in time to prevent the debtor from conveying his real estate.

Now, what the bill proposes to do is this: In all cases where the laws of a State require that the judgment of the State court shall be docketed in the several counties of the State in order to become a lien upon real estate located therein, the bill provides that Federal judgments shall also be docketed in the same way in order to make them a lien in the respective counties, allowing ninety days for perfecting the judgment and completing the docketing.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Why not give judgments of the Federal courts and judgments of the State courts the same privileges and benefits?

Mr. CASWELL. Because the Federal court is often held at a distance from the county where the land is located.

Mr. LYMAN. As to my own county, the Federal court rendering a judgment is not farther away than the State court.

Mr. CASWELL. Why, frequently the Federal court is 200 or 300 miles away.

Mr. LYMAN. So are the State courts as to many counties.

Mr. CASWELL. In many cases the United States judicial district embraces a whole State.

Mr. DORSEY. When a creditor brings an action in the Federal court he does so on his own volition; he can bring the action in the State court within whose jurisdiction the land upon which he wants to acquire a lien is situated, can he not?

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly.

Mr. DORSEY. Then let him bring his action in the State court, and he will have his judgment operative there.

Mr. CASWELL. Then you virtually say to persons living in other States, "You must go into the State court, if you would perfect your judgment before the debtor can place his real estate beyond the reach of the judgment."

Mr. McKENNA. As to the conveyance which the gentleman says might be made to dodge the judgment of the Federal court, would it not be void as a fraud on creditors?

Mr. CASWELL. It might or it might not be. The party purchasing the property from the debtor might act in entire good faith, while the debtor would put the money in his pocket and evade the operation of the judgment.

Mr. McKENNA. Hardly so. The laws of all the States, as I understand, provide that that can not be done.

Mr. CASWELL. The suggestion amounts simply to this, that the creditor must have two suits instead of one.

Mr. TUCKER. I resume the floor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is an amendment pending reported by the committee. No further amendment is in order unless it be an amendment to that amendment or a substitute for the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I offer a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I understood I had resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Virginia claims the floor he is entitled to it till the hour expires.

Mr. TUCKER. Did I understand the Chair to say that there is pending an amendment offered by the committee?

The SPEAKER. There is. It is an amendment proposing to strike out the second section.

Mr. TUCKER. Let the vote be taken on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TUCKER. I now call the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Is it in order to call for the reading of my substitute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I hope that will be withdrawn.

Mr. TUCKER. For what purpose?

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. That I may offer a substitute for the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I can not withdraw it for that. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. OATES], who desires to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw the demand for the previous question? While that is pending no amendment can be offered.

Mr. TUCKER. I do.

The amendment of Mr. OATES was read, as follows:

In line 10, insert the word "or" between the words "docketing" and "registry."

Mr. TUCKER. I now call the previous question upon the amendment and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I desire to suggest an amendment to which I think the chairman of the committee will assent.

The SPEAKER. The amendment can only be offered by unanimous consent unless the demand for the previous question is withdrawn.

Mr. TUCKER. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The amendment which I suggest is designed to obviate the objection of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. It is to strike out the words "or otherwise," in the fifth line.

The SPEAKER. There is one amendment pending, which will preclude any other amendment to the text of the bill until that is disposed of, except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Nebraska proposes a substitute for the entire bill, which is in order.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I ask that my substitute be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That no judgment entered in any circuit, district, or other court of the United States shall be a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, in any organized county in any State or Territory, until the judgment creditor, his assigns, executors, administrators, or other legal representatives, shall have filed a certified transcript of such judgment with the clerk of the district or circuit court, or other officer having in charge the judgment records of the county wherein the real estate sought to be subjected to the judgment so rendered is situate.

"SEC. 2. That such transcript filed as aforesaid shall be transcribed by the officer aforesaid into a record to be called 'The United States Judgment Lien Record for —— County, —— State,' to which record shall be kept an index of each case, entered in alphabetical order, under the name both of the plaintiff and defendant; and the officer with whom the said transcript is filed shall forthwith notify the clerk of the court in which said judgment was rendered of the date of the filing of said transcript in said county and State, giving the title of the case and the date of the rendition of said judgment; and the clerk of the United States court where said judgment was rendered shall keep an index, in alphabetical order, under the name of both plaintiff and defendant, showing the county or counties where said transcript or transcripts have been filed, and the date of said filings.

"SEC. 3. That the clerk of the United States court from which said transcript is procured shall be entitled to the same fees for a certified transcript of said judgment as is now provided by law for similar services.

"SEC. 4. That the clerk or other officer of the county with whom the said transcript is filed shall be entitled for the services rendered to the same compensation as is allowed by State or Territorial law for similar services.

"SEC. 5. That the party procuring said transcript and having it filed and recorded shall, in the first instance, pay all the costs incident thereto, and shall take the receipt of the county official for the expense of filing and recording said transcript, and file such receipt with the clerk of the court from which the said transcript was taken, which amount so paid, as evidenced by said receipt, together with the amount originally paid the clerk of the United States court for said transcript, shall be taxed as increased costs in the case.

"SEC. 6. That when a judgment, or any part thereof, is satisfied of record in the court where the same was rendered, the clerk of said court, under the seal of said court, shall certify the same to the proper officer of the county or counties where the transcript has been filed, which shall be entered of record across the entry of such recorded judgment, and be attested by the officer making said entry, and to the extent of such satisfaction shall release the lien.

"SEC. 7. That all laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr WEAVER] to change the word "rendered," in line 11 of the first section, to "recorded."

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I will so modify the substitute by adopting that amendment.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that substitute will not be adopted. I understand from it by law of Congress a State officer is required to discharge certain duties in the way of docketing and recording United States judgments. The original bill simply provides, the clerk of a Federal court shall not be compelled to do any docketing of State judgments, or before the clerk of a State court, unless the State will authorize its officers to accept them. The substitute, on the contrary, proposes a law of Congress shall go into the clerk's office of every clerk and require that clerk to make and docket United States judgments. I object to any such doctrine, and hope the substitute will be voted down.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will give me five minutes of his time.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to the floor, having offered the substitute; and if he proposes to occupy the floor he is entitled to an hour.

Mr. TUCKER. But, Mr. Speaker, I did not yield the floor for any other purpose than to allow the gentleman to move his substitute to the bill.

The SPEAKER. But when the gentleman from Virginia yielded the floor he yielded it absolutely. He took the floor, and after addressing the House called for the previous question. He afterward withdrew the previous question and yielded the floor that amendments might be offered. The gentleman from Nebraska has submitted the substitute which has just been read by the Clerk, and he is now entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, in order to determine how best to aid titles to real estate in different States of the Union growing out of liens arising from Federal judgments we should first look, it seems to me, to the object of our registry laws. What are they? I understand the efforts of the best lawyers who have written on this subject for years have been to try to adopt a system of registry laws whereby A, B, or C, when he desires to purchase a piece of real estate in any county in any State, may, in plain language, go himself or send an agent before breakfast in the morning and determine whether there is at that time, on that day, any lien against that real estate.

We may wade through, without any benefit, sir, long, complicated questions of real estate titles and incumbrances, but I understand that to be the true theory of the advance we are trying to make in our registry laws. How shall we do it with the complications which arise under a system making Federal judgments liens at the present time? We can only do it by substantial enactment to carry out the theory of registry laws in States where they are supposed to be somewhat perfect, and that is, to avoid complication of judgments—something similar to what has been presented in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. His amendment provides, and the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska follows in the same line, but seems to be a little long and complicated, that any Federal court, so far as a lien on real estate is concerned, shall be placed upon an equality with the judgment of a State court, by compelling the clerk to file and docket that judgment in the registry office of the State before it becomes a lien upon real estate in any of those counties. It is just and right and in accordance with the true theory of American registration.

Now, I will admit for one moment that there is considerable force in the suggestions that have been made by the distinguished gentlemen who have told me that when a judgment is rendered in favor of a judgment creditor the judgment debtor might run off into another county of the State and sell the property to an innocent purchaser before a copy of the docket could be obtained and sent to the county to prevent such fraudulent sale. Be it so. It is there when the judgment is rendered; his attorney can go to the clerk of the Federal court and procure a copy of the judgment docket; he can send it by mail to the county in which the transaction occurs immediately; and what lawyer will take the position that a sale to a pretended innocent purchaser intermediate between the date of the rendition of the judgment and the day when the mail shall carry a copy of the judgment docket to the register's office in the county will avail anything as a plea in a court of justice? Therefore, the true theory is to put the bill upon an equality with the statutes of the different States, which require at the present time that a copy of the judgment docket shall be on file in any county where real estate is situated before it can be a lien; otherwise it will operate very unjustly; otherwise we will have secret liens turning up three months after a man has bought real estate and paid for it, unless he goes to the expense of sending an agent all over the State to the different towns where the Federal courts are held throughout a great State, and perhaps for long journeys, to determine what date the judgment was rendered. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is contrary to our theory of registry law.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I believe it to be entirely proper that there should be Federal legislation upon this subject declaring how judgments of the Federal courts shall be liens and the extent to which they shall be liens. The objection I have to this bill, however, is that it surrenders the whole question of the extent of the liens of a judgment of the United States to the Legislatures of the different States, which I do not think is right.

I think Congress is entirely competent to deal with and take care of the question for itself, and to declare the extent to which these judgments shall be liens, what method shall be adopted for making them liens, and the manner in which they shall be enforced. I repeat, the objection I have to this bill is that it abrogates, or rather Congress surrenders to the Legislatures of the several States of the Union the jurisdiction to legislate upon this subject. While I do not think a State will do it—because, of course, any legislation in reference to a judgment of the United States would be also legislation in reference to the judgment of the State courts and have the same effect upon both; yet, nevertheless, while the State may not take such action, it puts it within the power of a Legislature of a State to declare that a judgment shall not be a lien at all. It may absolutely impair the validity of the lien within the State.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir; but I shall want more time if I yield for questions, which I hope the gentleman from Nebraska will yield to me.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I simply want to know what the gentleman from New York understands the law to be now upon that subject: whether the lien of United States judgments does not depend wholly upon the condition of the lien laws in the several States where such judgments are rendered?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that to be the case.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The only section of the Revised Statutes which I find bearing upon the subject provides just that thing.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not so understand.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. That is just what the law is now.

Mr. HISCOCK. My point is this, and I do not know whether his question is addressed to that point or not; but my point is that under this act you absolutely surrender to the Legislatures of the several States power to make them liens or not. Do I understand that so far as the existing law is concerned to-day the Legislature of the State has absolute jurisdiction over it?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Under the law of the United States as it exists now it is provided that liens upon judgments of the United States courts shall have the same force and be discharged just in the same way as those of the State courts.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does not go to that extent.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Precisely; it does.

Mr. HISCOCK. And provided that the Legislature shall still further make enactments in reference to it?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Precisely so.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not understand that to be the case. If that be the law I would like to have it read.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now, in view of all of the amendments which have been presented, to give consideration to the first part of the committee's bill, and I ask the attention of members of the House to this provision:

That judgments and decrees rendered in circuit or district courts within any State shall take effect by way of lien or otherwise to the same extent, in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

If the committee had stopped there it appears to me they would have accomplished their object and done all that was required to be done by this bill. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR] object to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska because it provides for State legislation for the registration of these decrees. The committee's bill does exactly the same thing.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REAGAN. I have only five minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The gentleman misunderstood my objection. It is not that. It is this, that by this bill of the gentleman from Nebraska it is proposed by an act of Congress to make the officers of the State our agents, or else there will be no lien at all.

Mr. REAGAN. If Congress sees proper to do it——

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Congress can not do it. The Constitution, which the gentleman from Texas and myself think so much of, prohibits that.

Mr. REAGAN. We differ in opinion about that; but I will proceed. The very same objection lies to the committee's bill. The first proviso is:

That whenever, by the laws of any State, judgments and decrees rendered in the courts thereof are made to depend for their effect, as liens or otherwise, upon the docketing, registry of the same, or upon any other requirement of law, the same shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize them to be docketed or registered, or compliance with any other of said requirements, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Then the second proviso goes on to make other provisions about the registration or what may authorize registration by the State officers. So that if the argument used against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska is good, it is a good argument against the two provisos of the committee's bill.

But what I want especially to ask the attention of the House to is the fact that the first part of the committee's bill ending at the word "State," in line 7, accomplishes all that is necessary to do; and the provisos simply becloud and confuse the matter, and they do a great deal worse.

While by the first part of the bill a judgment rendered in a circuit court has all the advantages of a judgment in a State court, which makes a lien everywhere, wherever recorded, the second proviso exempts the Federal court lien, saves the judgment creditor in the Federal court from the necessity of recording the lien for ninety days, during which time a citizen outside of the judicial circuit court in which the judgment is recorded, where there are two or more districts in a State, may purchase property any time within the ninety days without actual notice or constructive notice of a registration, and be defrauded out of his property. The law that will lead to such consequences defeats all the policy of the law, which is intended to protect persons by constructive notice against fraudulent conveyance. And I trust very much that I may be allowed, if my amendment was entered, to modify it so as to embrace both provisos, and strike out all after the word "State," in the seventh line of this bill. We shall then have a clear bill; we shall have Federal legislation declaring what the effect of a decree will be, and we will be doing all that it seems to me we can rightly do.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Texas will read his proposition as he now proposes to make it.

Mr. REAGAN. It is to strike out all after the word "State," in line 7 of the first section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand whether the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] yielded to the gentleman from Texas to offer an amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I asked permission to offer an amendment early in the discussion. I do not know whether it was entered.

The SPEAKER. That amendment was not in order at the time. Does the gentleman from Texas propose to amend the substitute.

Mr. REAGAN. No sir; I propose to strike out all after the word "State," in the seventh line of the committee's bill. Early in the discussion I asked permission to enter an amendment to strike out the second proviso in the committee's bill.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair stated the gentleman could not offer his amendment then, because there was one amendment to the text of the bill then pending proposed by the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Were not two amendments in order?

The SPEAKER. An amendment to an amendment would be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. Would it be in order to enter that amendment now? Does the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] cover both provisos?

The SPEAKER. The original bill is one proposition and the substitute proposed is a different one. While the substitute is pending there may be pending to the original proposition an amendment and an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I move then to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa so as to strike out both provisos.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has no amendment pending. When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN] proposed his amendment to strike out the proviso in the committee's bill it was not in order then, for the reason that there was at that time an amendment pending offered by the committee. Subsequently the amendment offered by the committee was voted on and sustained. Then the gentleman from Virginia yielded to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who offered an amendment. Pending that the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] proposed a subsitute for the original bill, which is now pending. These are the only propositions now pending.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it in order for me to move to perfect the original bill?

The SPEAKER. It is whenever the gentleman gets the floor for that purpose; and the Chair asked the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] whether he yielded the floor to the gentleman from Texas for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman to yield the floor to me to enter that amendment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I will do so.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I enter that amendment.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order as soon as the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the principle embodied in the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] is a correct one, and is in harmony with the legislation of most of the States. In most of the States of the Union, so far as my information extends, a judgment rendered in a Federal court or a judgment rendered in a given other county in the State, takes effect in a county other than the one in which it is rendered as a lien on real estate only from the time a transcript of it is filed or a docket entry of it is made in the clerk's office of the county in which the lien is sought to be made—where the real estate is situated on which a lien is sought.

That is a perfect safeguard against fraud and affords the greatest security to the purchaser of real estate. It is also a perfectly just provision, and should not be departed from, unless you wish to extend some special favor to the judgments of Federal courts which the States do not extend to the judgments rendered in the several counties within their jurisdiction.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Please excuse me. I have only five minutes. I suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] that he make modification of his amendment as follows: In the sixth line, after the word "Territory," insert the words "except the county in which it was rendered." Then strike out all of his substitute after the eighth line of the first section and insert these words: "A court of record in such county, the judgments of which, under the laws of the State or Territory, are liens on real estate;" so that it will read, that "no judgment entered in any circuit, district, or other court of the United States shall be a lien upon the real estate of a judgment debtor in any organized county in any State or Territory except the county in which it was rendered, until the judgment creditor, his assigns, executors, administrators, or other legal representatives shall have filed a certified transcript of such judgment with the clerk of a court of record in such county, the judgments of which, under the laws of the State or Territory, are liens upon real estate."

That presents the simple proposition whether or no the lien shall extend constructively beyond the time when actual notice is given by filing a transcript in a court of general jurisdiction the judgment of which is a lien upon real estate.

Mr. MILLS. Why not have it recorded?

Mr. HOLMAN. The recording would require State legislation perhaps.

Mr. MILLS. The same point will be good against the filing.

Mr. HOLMAN. The act of filing in a public office would not seem to require the sanction of State legislation. If it did, it would be readily granted.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. How can we direct the officer to mark it "filed?"

Mr. HOLMAN. In your original bill you provide that it shall be registered.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. But under State law.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is not a State in this Union that has not made some such provision, or would not if the occasion arose.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I know one that has not.

A MEMBER. There are several.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] to avoid that point of State entirely, except as to the mere act of filing. You have then presented the simple question whether we shall go further than giving an effectual lien to a judgment of Federal courts from the time notice of the rendition of the judgment is actually given.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe an amendment to the substitute is now in order.

The SPEAKER. An amendment to the substitute is in order whenever the gentleman has the floor, but it will not be voted upon until the original text is perfected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the floor now. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] yields to me for that purpose.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] offer an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] allows him to present an amendment to the substitute at this time. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as above.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House to the law as it now stands, and especially do I invite the attention of my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], as well as my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

I read from the Revised Statutes, section 716:

> The party recovering a judgment in any common-law cause in any circuit or district court shall be entitled to similar remedies upon the same, by execution or otherwise, to reach the property of the judgment debtor, as are now provided in like cases by the laws of the State in which such court is held, or by any such laws hereafter enacted which may be adopted by general rules of such circuit or district court. And such courts may from time to time, by general rules, adopt such State laws as may hereafter be in force in such State in relation to remedies upon judgment as aforesaid by execution or otherwise.

Under that statute, which comes from the original judiciary act, the following is announced by Abbott in his United States Practice as the correct construction of the rule of law:

> Judgments and decrees of the national courts become liens upon the real property of the defendant lying within the district in which they are rendered; but it is not easy to state from the adjudications precisely how far this lien is regulated by the local law.
> The existence of this lien, it has been held, does not result from any direct legislation of Congress on the subject. But under the judiciary act of September 24, 1789, the courts of the United States have uniformly adopted the principles of State jurisprudence relative to the lien of judgments, so far as applicable. The extent of the lien, or the question what judgment or decree may form a lien, and what kinds of property may be holden, appears to depend upon the State law. The judgment or decree is a lien upon the property claimed, if a similar judgment or decree rendered in the State court would be a lien upon the like property. The duration of the lien was expressly made, by act of July 4, 1840, dependent on the State law. That act declared that "judgments and decrees hereafter rendered in the circuit and district courts of the United States, within any State, shall cease to be liens on real estate or chattels real, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such States now cease by law to be liens thereon."
> But it is not to be understood that regulations of State law requiring a judgment of a State court to be registered or docketed in a particular manner or in a certain office must be followed in respect to United States judgments. In those States where a judgment in the State courts creates a lien, a judgment in a court of the United States has that operation throughout the district to which the jurisdiction of the court extends; and State legislation modifying the lien of judgments or restricting their operation can not affect the lien. Moreover, the lien extends, irrespective of State restrictive laws, to all lands of the defendant throughout the district. The act of 1840, above cited, does not operate as an adoption of all the provisions which may prescribe conditions requisite to render a State judgment a lien, such as a statute requiring a judgment to be recorded in the county where the land lies, but only refers to the State law to determine when the lien shall cease.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], it will be seen, is unduly apprehensive. This bill surrenders nothing to the States that they have not always had.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the trouble which has sprung up in this matter grows out of the difference in the laws of the various States. For instance, by virtue of the law which I have read, a judgment rendered in a Federal court becomes in my State eo instanti a lien upon all real estate throughout the judicial district. In a circuit court of the State the judgment is a lien throughout the county in which it is rendered. The bill which the committee propose will limit the lien of Federal judgments in States which have laws for registering the judgments of the United States courts to ninety days, unless the judgment plaintiffs, or their representatives, avail themselves of that statute and file copies of the lien in the counties in pursuance thereof. This can only be done, as we have seen, when the Federal judges in their respective districts have, by rules of court, adopted that legislation.

There is no law in Arkansas for the registry of the judgments of the United States courts anywhere. It is not the practice. Such I understand is the law in Virginia, Illinois, and a number of other States. As I construe this bill, it does not affect those States unless they may hereafter enact laws for the registry of the judgments of the United States courts, when the Federal judges may then adopt them and conform to the practice in such States.

Now, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas would simply leave the law precisely what it is now, with this exception—the power would then be withdrawn from the Federal judges to make rules of court adopting such legislation as the States have, or may hereafter pass, for the regulation of liens.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska for two minutes more.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. In some other States than those I have mentioned the State laws have provided for docketing or registering judgments of Federal courts in the several counties before the liens attach in those counties. As to those States, the committee's bill will make the lien operative from the passage of the bill, but will limit it to ninety days unless the judgment plaintiffs avail themselves of the statute.

Now, can we not agree upon a compromise, so as to make this bill satisfactory to all parties, leaving the law as it has been from the foundation of the Government, with the single exception that the lien of the judgment of a Federal court shall not be operative for more than ninety days in those States where the laws provide for registering the judgment of the Federal courts in the several counties, unless the parties plaintiffs avail themselves of such statutes? If ninety days is too long, make it thirty or sixty days, as may be deemed best. If that can not be done, the bill should be recommitted, so that it may be matured, keeping in view the different statutes of the several States.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend know of any State of the Union where a judgment rendered in one county is permitted to be a lien on real estate in any other county without some transcript of the record, or some other notification of the existence of the judgment?

Mr. ROGERS. No; but that question has no relevancy to the present discussion. The lien of the judgment of a Federal court operates in every county in that district by virtue of the law as it has existed from the foundation of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is it not manifestly unjust in many cases, giving judgments of the Federal courts an undue advantage over judgments of the State courts?

Mr. ROGERS. No; I think not. I think it right, and that no advantage is now given to the Federal courts. The lien is coextensive with the jurisdiction in each case.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I see that by section 6 of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] the clerk of a United States court in which judgment is rendered is required, in case of full or partial payment, to notify the clerk of the court in which the transcript of the judgment shall be filed by the judgment creditor. I would like the gentleman from Nebraska to explain how the clerk of the United States court is to know the county in which the transcript is filed. When the judgment creditor takes his transcript he can file it where he pleases, and the clerk of the United States court has no evidence as to where it is filed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. The gentleman will find that in another portion of my substitute that matter is fully provided for. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA].

Mr. MCKENNA. I think we all can concur in the wisdom of adding to the strength of a Federal judgment the security of a lien, if it be necessary under existing law. The only point of dispute between us is how we can bring knowledge of that judgment to those concerned to know it. According to the present law we bring that knowledge by various county organizations and records, to which persons who have a concern about it have access.

Now, sir, do you want to extend higher privilege to the Federal judgment creditors than to State judgment creditors? I think not. Under the present system a judgment of a State court is a lien in the county where rendered and from the time it is docketed, but in no other county until that judgment is registered or recorded there. Now, sir, why extend any greater privilege to the judgment of a Federal court?

Mr. Speaker, in the State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor we passed a law, or appeared to do so, that the mortgagee should have a certain time to record his mortgage, estimated by the distance from the county seat of the county. After that law went into effect there were great embarrassments felt in transfers of property, and the people were not relieved from those embarrassments until the supreme court of the State by a wise construction remitted the section away as to the old law, which provided that at the moment of time you examined the records if you found nothing there affecting property you could pass upon the title to it with safety.

If you enact into law the bill introduced by the committee you will introduce that same embarrassment into every State of this Union which we discovered in California. Therefore, from the experience we have had there, I think this House can take warning against this bill and strike out at least that portion which provides for ninety days' time to record a judgment as embarrassing to every one who shall be concerned with titles or have dealings with debtors. If I understand the argument of the gentleman from Arkansas, there is no necessity for legislation, because the laws of the States can respectively be adopted by rules and regulations in the Federal courts, and the purpose of this bill be thereby accomplished.

I think therefore, if the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska be not adopted, we should at the proper time vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN].

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to us the proposition is one of common fairness that a judgment creditor in a Federal court should be entitled to the same privileges and rights, and be subjected to the same conditions and requirements, as a creditor in the State courts. The steps required to be taken in order that the judgment shall become a lien upon real estate should be the same in both instances. I think this is a proposition of such common fairness it must meet with the approval of every one.

It is important not only to the creditor that he should be secured, but it is also of importance to the people at large throughout the State that they should have every facility in their daily business transactions for ascertaining what property is encumbered by these judgment liens, and the facility for obtaining that knowledge should be the same in case of a judgment of a Federal court as in the case of a judgment of a State court. It would certainly be a great convenience as well as a protection to the citizen if the requirement should apply to all judgments alike, of both Federal and State courts, that no lien should attach to real estate until the docketing thereof in the county where such real estate may be.

I believe the proposition embraced in the substitute is a fair one. It gives the judgment creditor in a Federal court the same facility for maturing his lien as a judgment creditor in a State court. There is no possible objection which can be urged against the requirement that the judgment of a Federal court shall be recorded or filed and docketed in the various counties of a State before the lien thereof shall attach in such counties that would not apply with equal force to the same requirement in respect to the judgment of a State court.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. By what authority can Congress impose this duty upon State officers?

Mr. GILFILLAN. That is the point I was coming to. The original bill reported by the committee undertakes to remedy that difficulty by providing that this provision prescribing the duties of the county officers of a State shall not be operative so as to prescribe such duties to such State officers until the Legislature of the State shall provide therefor. But suppose the Legislature of a State should refuse or neglect to enact any such provision? Shall the judgment creditor have no lien?

I will say that, as it seems to me, the objection that we have no power to legislate so as to control State officers, or county officers of a State, may be overcome or obviated by providing that until the Legislatures of the several States shall, by suitable enactments, prescribe the duties of such officers in relation to Federal judgments, the judgment of the Federal courts shall become a lien upon the property of the judgment debtor within the State by being docketed in the office of the clerk of the Federal courts.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. And when you overcome that difficulty you will abandon that substitute.

Mr. GILFILLAN. We think not.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. It will not be this substitute.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I do not agree with the gentleman as to his construction of the provisions of the substitute nor of the bill reported by the committee. I shall be satisfied with either the bill reported by the committee or the substitute if it embrace such provisions as will carry out the idea I have attempted to advance.

But the importance of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is so great that we should not pass it in a crude form, and I will suggest at the proper time—I will propose myself, if no one else will do so—that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with the view and for the purpose of reforming and perfecting the bill; for it seems there is not so much difference of opinion after all as to what ought to be accomplished by this measure.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, more important, perhaps, than gentlemen would imagine. All we have in view is to see that the people are protected in their rights of property. The purpose of registration is to give notice to the people so they might not become purchasers of property against which there is a lien.

Now, I would suggest, as I have heard nobody else do so, that the Federal court is not a court for the masses of the people, nor is it a court with which they are familiar. The State court is the people's court. The jurisdiction of the Federal court is limited to foreign creditors, people from abroad, and a few distinctive cases which find lodgment and jurisdiction within the Federal tribunals in the States; and if we are going to give notice to the masses of the people that they may not be imposed upon in the purchase of property against which there is a lien, no bill should be passed except one that causes a judgment against the property to be registered in the county where the property lies, so that all may have access to it.

When a man goes to purchase real estate in my State or county the first place he goes to is what we call the register's office of the county; then to the clerk's office of the State circuit court. He never dreams of going to the Federal court to see whether there is a lien registered there; and to enact any law that permits a lien upon a person's property and requires it to be recorded in a court with which the people are not familiar is to do absolute injustice to the people, and to every other court as well, and subject them at any time to the purchase of property on which these liens exist, by which means they will lose their money. It is a mistake, in my judgment, to enact such a bill into a law; and, therefore, it seems to me that the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska is the right thing to pass, if you are going to pass anything.

There is not one man out of a hundred thousand who ever heard of the recording of a lien in the Federal court.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think the substitute which is presented by the gentleman from Nebraska is much better than the original proposition, because I think the substitute is more simple, more easily understood, and much more practical in its effect. It seems to me that this original measure is susceptible of a variety of constructions, and must lead to confusion. It may be to the astute acumen and legal finesse of the Judiciary Committee is due the fact that it has been enabled to steer it safely through the labyrinth of difficulties between these joint jurisdictions of the State and Federal courts; but I for one can not fully comprehend this proposition, unless it attaches to the judgments obtained in the Federal courts whatever disqualifications may be incident to judgments in the State courts, and does not attach to them any advantage which they do not have by being obtained in Federal courts.

Neither of these bills removes what is the serious inconvenience to the profession and to creditors in the various States of the Union. That is, judgments obtained in the Federal courts in one section of the State are liens all over the State. That is the difficulty of the situation, as I understand it, and there should be formal legislation to remedy it. But it strikes me that the better way to effect the purpose contemplated by this bill would be to require the liens of the Federal courts to be transmitted to the county courts, as provided by the substitute, as I understand it, upon request, and let them be entered there and take effect from the date of their entry, giving the time for that purpose allowed by the substitute. And I think, as this is a matter of much concern, and inasmuch as it involves the consideration of a subject that is necessarily complicated, that the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska should be preferred to the original bill, and for that reason I favor it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that under the first section of the bill, with very great effort and use of language, it is provided—

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall take effect, by way of lien or otherwise, to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Now, I say with great deference that this does not touch all the provisions that may exist in the several States, as, for instance, the supersedeas of judgments.

In the State courts the entry alone often makes a judgment effective, and there the supersedeas must take place. Now if that condition of supersedeas attaches to the judgment of the circuit and district courts, where shall the superseding take place—where the copy goes, or in the district courts? Must the man that will stay it go to the United States court and there make the acknowledgment which stays the judgment, or shall he go where it is recorded?

Now the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] in its first section seems to go more directly to the point of practical difficulty in all the counties of the vast Union, by providing that the copy shall go where the land is, and the effect which follows is that it enters a recorded copy. It does seem to me that under the bill which comes from the very learned committee the employment of the language "and not otherwise" would attach new conditions. If I had a judgment in a United States court, and lived in the State of Maryland, and obtained a judgment, say in the district court of Baltimore, and somebody desired to supersede or stay that judgment, where should he go—to Baltimore, or to the county where the land lay, my own county, to acknowledge it? There is no machinery there for that purpose. Shall he go to Baltimore? There is no machinery there. How is it to be made? That is a most important question and one which I know no other committee could so well grapple with. I do not see how that objection is removed. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is very much better than the original bill. But as the alternative I prefer taking the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER], and especially the first section, which extends no further than the recording of the copy in the local jurisdiction and the entering of it where it is intended to affect lands—in the county. That is all I desire to say. I yield the remainder of my time, if I have any, back to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE].

Mr. BOYLE. In my judgment the passage of the committee's bill may work great hardship and have a different effect from what seems to be contemplated. The first clause of the bill will have the effect to put judgments of the United States and State courts on an equality and require them to be entered in like manner. Then follows this proviso:

That whenever, by the laws of any State, judgments and decrees rendered in the courts thereof are made to depend for their effect, as liens or otherwise, upon docketing, registry of the same, or upon any other requirement of law, the same shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize them to be docketed or registered, or compliance with any other of said requirements, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

I can but make the point I desire to by stating what would be the effect in Pennsylvania. In the Federal courts of that State judgments become liens, so as to give them preference to liens subsequently entered, by registry in a "judgment docket." They then continue to be liens on real estate for five years. If Pennsylvania shall fail to enact the legislation contemplated by the clause of the bill I have quoted, providing for the registration of the judgments of Federal courts in the several counties, then all the provisions as to "docketing, registry of the same, or any other requirement of law," and the effect of such registration, &c., "as to lien or otherwise, shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States." That is to say, these Federal judgments in Pennsylvania shall cease to be liens, unless Pennsylvania shall enact the legislation before referred to. Pennsylvania may not enact it. The judgment creditors in those judgments can not compel such legislation. Under the law and as it stands they can not file their judgments in the State courts. Their liens by virtue of their Federal judgments will be gone without any fault of theirs. In other words, if Pennsylvania fails to pass the laws required, judgments in Federal courts in that State will not be liens on real estate.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill could stop with the word "State," in the seventh line, it would be a perfect bill. It would then provide—

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall take effect, by way of lien or otherwise, to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Now, why should a suitor in a Federal court have any advantage over one in the State courts? If he chooses the State forum and gets a judgment there in my State it is only a lien within the county in which the court was held and the judgment rendered. My brother here chooses the Federal forum and he gets a judgment, and his judgment under the present construction of the law is coextensive with the judicial district. Now, I do not know why he should have any advantage over me. It seems to me the proper policy is to encourage suits to be brought in the States; that a man may be tried by a jury of the district by his neighbors, and that the lien ought to be restricted precisely as the lien in the State courts. I shall vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska and for the amendment or substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HALL].

Mr. HALL. It is a well-settled rule of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts that the lien of their judgments in the absence of positive law is coextensive with the process they may issue. This contemplated legislation, which practically restricts the effect of the lien of judgments to the county in which they may be rendered, may be said in effect to take away the liens of Federal judgments. That will be the result of it unless some subsequent step be taken by the judgment creditor.

Now, so far as I am concerned, I think the proper solution, if the House is disposed to take that view of the subject, is to so amend the substitute offered as to deny to judgments of Federal courts the effect of liens except as a consequence of some subsequent act on the part of the creditor, and by the rule of the common law, as recognized in the Federal courts, that should be the levy of an execution. If this legislation is to obtain, there is no solution, there is no method, by which the lien of the judgments of Federal courts can be effected through the instrumentality of State courts; there is no authority on the part of the clerks of State courts to attempt to give validity or force to Federal judgments, and if this legislation is to obtain, the true rule should be to say and declare that Federal judgments shall not be a lien anywhere except after execution has been issued and levied. That will solve the whole question.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I will utilize that little time by saying that in what we are doing in reference to this question of liens we ought to have some reference to the rights of innocent purchasers. I believe that all secret liens are a relic of barbarism. I believe they are against the genius and spirit of our institutions. Like entailment and perpetuity and limitations upon property, they are mere obstructions in the way of progress, and prevent the easy, speedy transmission of property from one person to another. But if we are determined that we will have these liens, then it is necessary that we should give the greatest possible publicity to the assertion of them, and that can be done only by having the liens recorded in books in offices where the people who are likely to purchase the property can have free and easy access to them.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, the objection that has been urged to the substitute is that it proposes to use a State officer for filing these transcripts. The only difference in that respect between the substitute and the bill of the committee is that the bill of the committee proposes the same thing, but in such language that they think nobody will discover it. What does the committee's bill say? It says that such judgments shall take effect by way of lien to the same extent and in like manner as judgments and decrees of courts of such States, and not otherwise. Now, I would like to know how they will get a lien in any county where they propose to file a transcript without filing it with the State officers, unless they set up in every county a United States official whose duty it shall be to file these liens. If such a proposition as that were made, no one would for a moment support their bill; no one would entertain the idea that in every county there should be erected a United States official whose duty it should be to file these transcripts. The substitute proposes in plain language, leaving no doubt as to what is to be done, that these transcripts are to be filed with the State officer whose duty it is to take charge of judgments, and shall not become liens until they are filed with that officer.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIBBLE. When the creditor carries his judgment transcript to the clerk of the State court, and the clerk says to him, "I have no judgment-book for United States judgments," how are you going to carry your act into operation.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. There is a provision in the bill whereby these judgment record books are to be furnished.

Mr. DIBBLE. But you have to provide for making it in some way the duty of the clerk to use the book.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Under the bill proposed by the committee who is required to file these transcripts? Is it not the county official?

Mr. TUCKER. Unquestionably, when the law of the State authorizes him to do so.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. There is an amendment to be offered to this bill which will provide that until such laws shall have been enacted by the State this shall not go into effect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's hour has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be heard while the demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I want to know if it is not proper that the vote be taken first on the substitute?

The SPEAKER. Just exactly the contrary is proper under the rules and the practice of the House. The original text must be perfected before the House is called upon to vote as between that and some other proposition.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. I desire at some time before the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] is voted upon to offer an amendment to the substitute. Must that amendment be offered before the previous question is ordered?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is demanded on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], which is the first proposition to be voted upon by the House.

The previous question was ordered on the amendment offered by Mr. Oates, inserting the word "or" between the word "docketing" and the word "registering," in line 10 of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] permit me to offer at this point——

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered upon the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, and the amendment must be voted upon.

The amendment of Mr. OATES was adopted.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, what is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. There being no further amendment to the bill, the question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moved an amendment to strike out the last proviso of the first section of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated the amendment of the gentleman from Texas would be in order when the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama was disposed of.

Mr. STRUBLE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas now move his amendment?

Mr. TUCKER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. My amendment is to strike out the second proviso.

Mr. TUCKER. My friend from Arkansas desires to offer an amendment, as he says, to perfect the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas proposes an amendment which he claims is also to perfect the bill. As soon as this is disposed of another amendment will be in order, unless the previous question should be demanded and ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not care to debate my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the proviso, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That ninety days from the rendition of any judgment or decree of said courts of the United States hereafter rendered, or from the passage of this act, as to any such judgment or decree heretofore rendered, be allowed to any party for compliance with the laws of any State as to the docketing or registry or other requirements relating to judgments and decrees of the courts thereof; and such compliance shall be held sufficient to give full effect thereto according to said law, anything to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. TUCKER. I now call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the previous question on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas proposing to strike out the last proviso is equivalent to the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands.

The amendment of Mr. REAGAN was agreed to; there being—ayes 49, noes 25.

Mr. TUCKER. As I understand, the substitute of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. WEAVER] is now before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. TUCKER. I take the floor, and yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there has been much misunderstanding as to the purpose and effect of this bill. It does not propose either to enlarge, confirm, or restrict any existing liens of judgments of the Federal courts, except so far as to make them conform to the regulations prescribed by the laws of the several States. The first section provides:

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States within any State shall take effect, by way of lien or otherwise, to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

This simply makes the liens of judgments of Federal courts conform to the liens conferred by State laws upon judgments of the State courts. That is clear. The bill then goes on to declare:

Provided, however, That whenever, by the laws of any State, judgments and decrees rendered in the courts thereof are made to depend for their effect, as liens or otherwise, upon the docketing, registry of the same, or upon any other requirement of law, the same shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize them to be docketed or registered, or compliance with any other of said requirements, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

These provisions constitute all of the bill that now remains. They provide simply for registration, and are intended to protect innocent purchasers from a secret lien. Every one knows the harsh injustice which is many times worked through the sale of property by a debtor against whom judgments have been rendered, the property having upon it a lien of which the purchaser is not aware. This bill is intended to bring the knowledge of such liens home to the locality of the property, so that the purchaser may readily refer to the registry-list and ascertain whether there be such a lien on the property or not.

The substitute offered by the gentleman from Nebraska is most fatally defective. All the conditions specified in it are made conditions precedent to the lien. In other words, it should be entitled "A bill for the destruction of the liens of judgments in the Federal courts;" for its language is that "No judgment entered in any circuit, district, or other court of the United States shall be a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor in any organized county of the State or Territory until the judgment creditor" shall do a great number of things, which are specified. If, for instance, there should be a failure on the part of the clerk to provide an index to the registry-book, or to do many other things which the substitute proposes to require, the judgment creditor will have no lien, for no judgment is to be a lien until all these things specified shall have been done. The creditor may use diligence to have his decree or judgment recorded, but if there should be any accidental failure on his part, or if the clerk by inattention should fail to perform any one of the requirements specified in the bill, there would be no lien in favor of that judgment creditor.

They are indeed made conditions precedent, for the declaration in the beginning is that no judgment rendered by any Federal court shall have any effect until the things enumerated in the bill are done and performed. Therefore I say that a failure to do any one of them takes away from that judgment the lien it would otherwise be. I can not think for a moment, therefore, the House will adopt any such substitute.

The bill of the committee, the ninety days' provision having been stricken out, is for the protection of innocent purchasers from secret liens, which often work injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OATES. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will be able to tell us something about the extent of this language, if this bill should go into effect. I read from the committee's bill:

That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States shall take effect, by way of lien or otherwise, to the same extent and in like manner, and not otherwise, as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Now, a judgment rendered in a circuit or district court of the United States in the State my friend represents, under the laws of that State, becomes a lien in the county in which it was rendered. It becomes a lien from the day execution is levied under it. Liens in his State are upon lands in the county where the judgment is rendered, or transferred, filed, or some notice given under the law. Is it the meaning of this language that a judgment rendered in a Federal court shall not be a lien on real estate of any other county, or does it extend it beyond the county to all other counties?

Mr. OATES. The language is very plain that it makes it conform to the State lien.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it have territorial limit? Does it extend Federal judgments as liens where State judgments are liens?

Mr. TUCKER. Just exactly.

Mr. OATES. Exactly so.

Mr. TUCKER. If my friend from Alabama will allow me to answer the gentleman from Indiana, I will say the mistake of gentlemen on this floor in reference to this bill is in supposing it proposes to change the extent of liens of Federal judgments beyond that of State judgments. The purpose is to put them upon the same platform.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman let me ask him what is the object of the provision of the bill?

Mr. TUCKER. What provision?

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision:

Provided, however, That whenever, by the laws of any State, judgments and decrees rendered in the courts thereof are made to depend for their effect, as liens or otherwise, upon the docketing, registry of the same, or upon any other requirement of law, the same shall not be held to apply to the judgments and decrees of the circuit and district courts of the United States, unless now, or until hereafter, the laws of such State shall authorize them to be docketed or registered, or compliance with any other of said requirements, in the same manner as judgments and decrees of the courts of such State.

Mr. TUCKER. At present without that provision the lien of the judgment of a Federal court would be so without the requirement of being docketed.

Mr. COLLINS. And perfectly secret.

Mr. TUCKER. Yes; and perfectly secret. The State judgment would have to be docketed in order to be a lien, but a Federal judgment would be a lien without being docketed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TUCKER. He has yielded to me to answer the question, and I will give him more time.

The whole purpose of the bill is to put a Federal judgment on the same platform with a State judgment; that is to say, if the State law did not allow the holder of a Federal judgment to put his judgment on the docket it should be a lien without being docketed; but that as soon as the State did permit it he would be required to docket it as in the case of a State judgment, so that if he did not he would lose his lien.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this becomes the law, that then will be the provision.

Mr. TUCKER. If I understand the force of the language; and I will say to the gentleman that it is my language, and I know the gentleman is ingenious, but I do not believe he can get any other meaning from it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Alabama yields to me to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] whether it is not the object of the bill to place a Federal judgment on the same footing as a State judgment? What I wish to know is, whether it extends it beyond the privilege now possessed by a State judgment.

Mr. TUCKER. Not in the slightest degree, because at present a Federal judgment without being docketed is a lien all through the State. If this be adopted, a Federal judgment can not be a lien until it is docketed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then it restricts instead of extending it.

Mr. TUCKER. Of course it does.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from Virginia has explained with more force and clearness than I could have done the purpose and object of this bill. Its only effect is that it requires judgments in the Federal courts to conform to liens given by State laws to State judgments in reference to being registered, and is for the protection of innocent purchasers. That is the operation and effect of it. Now, in States like mine, where judgments have no lien but only the execution, at the time it comes into the hands of the sheriff this law would be without operation or effect. It seems to me there has been an unusual amount of misunderstanding upon a measure the language of which is perfectly clear.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to say a word to call back the attention of the House to the necessity of the question that has been suggested, but under the circumstances I feel as though I ought not to take up any time at all, and will simply say now that in my judgment this bill, that was intended to do just what every member of the House wanted to have done, has been utterly destroyed by the amendment which has been adopted, so that I, a member of the committee, and one earnestly in the interest of the bill from the beginning, having seen the want of such legislation, shall be compelled to vote against it. As to the substitute, it is absolutely, unconstitutionally absurd. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana to the substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The original bill, as it now stands, seems to accomplish the purpose, and I am inclined to withdraw the amendment, unless the gentleman from Nebraska prefers to have a vote upon it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Let us take a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to have the substitute read as it will stand if amended.

Mr. LITTLE. If in order, I move to strike out of the first section of the bill reported by the committee all after the words "provided, however," in line 7, and insert what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In any State wherein provision by law is or shall be made for entering and preserving in a public record in every county thereof the titles of actions and suits, including the name of the proper court and the amount claimed or recovered in each case, brought in any court of the United States therein, no judgment of any such court shall operate as a lien upon real estate in any such county outside of the one wherein rendered until the title of the proper action or suit shall be entered in such public record thereof: Provided, No such judgment shall operate as such lien in any county from a date prior to the time of its rendition and entry.

Mr. TUCKER. I call the previous question upon the adoption of the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TUCKER. I now call the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill and all pending amendments.

Mr. CANNON. Before that I would like to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I think I can not yield for any more amendments.

Mr. EVERHART. Is it in order now to offer amendments?

The SPEAKER. Not pending the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Virginia in charge of the bill, in accordance with the universal practice of the House, has been recognized by the Chair and demands the previous question. If that is voted down it will be in order for the gentleman to offer an amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the first section of the substitute be read as it will stand if amended.

The first section was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the substitute.

The amendment was rejected.

The question recurring upon the substitute proposed by Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, the question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 63.

So the substitute was rejected.

Mr. EVERHART. It is in order to offer an amendment to the first section of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has been ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill, upon which the question now recurs.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. EVERHART. I desire to make a motion to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. EVERHART. I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to insert, in line 5 of section 1, after the word "otherwise," the words:
"In all counties of said State in which said district or circuit court has jurisdiction."

The motion to recommit was not agreed to.

Mr. TUCKER. I now demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it in order to move to recommit this bill without instructions?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order. The motion to recommit made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was made before the previous question was demanded; and, under the rules of the House it will be in order, pending the demand for the previous question or after it is ordered, to move to recommit the bill with or without instructions.

Mr. ROGERS. Pending the demand for the previous question, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 31, noes 56.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TUCKER. I renew the demand for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district in the city of Peoria. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN].

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and that it be considered in the House; and I will state that I shall move to strike out the eleventh section, making the appropriation which caused the bill to be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the counties of McDonough, Fulton, and Tazewell be detached from the southern district of Illinois and be included in the northern district of Illinois.

SEC. 2. That the northern district of Illinois shall be divided into two divisions, to be known as the northern and southern divisions. The counties of Peoria, Stark, Henry, Rock Island, Mercer, Henderson, Warren, Knox, McDonough, Fulton, Putnam, Marshall, Woodford, Tazewell, Livingston, and Iroquois shall constitute the southern division of said northern district of Illinois, the courts for which shall be held at the city of Peoria.

SEC. 3. That the terms of the circuit and district courts in and for said northern district of Illinois shall be held at the city of Chicago, as now provided by law, and at the city of Peoria, in the southern division of said district, on the third Mondays of April and October of each year.

SEC. 4. That all civil suits not of a local nature, and criminal prosecutions, must be brought in the division of the said northern district of Illinois where the defendant or defendants reside or the offense is committed; but if there are two or more defendants in civil suits residing in the different divisions or districts, the action may be brought in either in which either of the defendants may reside. When the defendant is a non-resident of the district, action may be brought in either division of said district wherein the defendant may be found.

SEC. 5. That the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the northern district of Illinois shall be respectively clerks of the courts of both divisions of the said district; that each of said clerks, or his deputies, shall keep an office open at all times at each of the places of holding said court, and shall there keep the records, files, and documents pertaining to the court of that division; and said clerk shall be entitled to the same fees now allowed him by law. In addition to his powers to appoint deputies, as now prescribed by law, each of said clerks shall be required to appoint a chief deputy for the court of that division in which he himself may not reside, who shall have all the powers of the clerk in his absence.

SEC. 6. That the marshal and district attorney for said northern district of Illinois shall respectively appoint at least one deputy residing in the said southern division, unless he shall reside there himself, and also maintain an office at that place of holding court.

SEC. 7. That all causes and proceedings in law, equity, admiralty, or bankruptcy now pending in the circuit or district court of the northern district of Illinois, where all the defendants (or the plaintiffs, when the jurisdiction is derived from the residence of the plaintiff or complainants within the district) shall reside in the southern division of said district, shall be transferred to the court of such division, said transfer to be made in vacation or in term-time; if made in vacation, only on the affidavit that all the said parties plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, are residents of said southern division, and ten days' notice of the purpose and time of the hearing of said motion; but if made in term-time, then on motion and affidavit only

SEC. 8. That all civil causes now pending in the United States circuit or district court for the southern district of Illinois against parties residing in that portion of said district by this act annexed to and incorporated in the said northern district may remain and be finally disposed of, respectively, in the court in which they are now pending, unless the defendants therein shall desire to have the same transferred to the appropriate division of said court in the district in which they reside, as provided by this act; in which last event such transfer shall be applied for and made to the court for the division of the residence of such defendant in said northern district, or to the court of the said southern district, as the case may be, in the manner above provided in the seventh section hereof for the transfer of pending causes from the court of the northern division of said northern district to that of the southern division thereof, mutatis mutandis.

SEC. 9. That when a cause shall be transferred as above provided by the seventh and eighth sections hereof, either from the northern division of said northern district to the southern division thereof, or from the southern district of Illinois to the southern division of said northern district, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court from which the transfer is made to carefully transmit to the clerk of the court to which the transfer is made the entire files of papers in the cause, and all documents and deposits in his court pertaining thereto, together with a certified transcript of the record of all orders, interlocutory decrees, or other entries in said cause; and he shall also certify, under the seal of the court, that the papers sent are all which are on file in said court belonging to said cause; for the performance of which duties said clerk so transmitting and certifying shall receive the same fees as are now allowed by law for similar services, to be taxed in the bill of costs and regularly collected with the other costs in the cause; and such transcript, when so certified and received, shall thenceforth constitute a part of the record of the cause in the court to which the transfer shall be made.

SEC. 10. That the judge of the United States circuit or district court for said northern district of Illinois may, by order, from time to time appoint and hold additional special terms of said court in said southern division of said district, for the disposal of the unfinished business thereof, whenever the interest of the public and condition of the docket shall so require.

SEC. 11. That until the completion of the public building of the United States at the city of Peoria, the marshal of the said northern district of Illinois shall procure suitable rooms for holding courts in said city, and offices for the clerk, marshal, and district attorney, at a cost to the United States not to exceed $2,000 per annum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be considered in the House.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDEN. I apprehend it is not worth while to make any remarks about the bill unless some gentleman desires an explanation. I move to amend by striking out the last section of the bill, as I understand the public building will be completed by the time the court is established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. TUCKER. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5196) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of California and create the United States judicial district of Southern California; and yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. This bill was read the day before yesterday. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from its further consideration and that it be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 5196) is on the House Calendar, unless it has been sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union since it was reported. The Chair is advised it has not been.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose there will be no objection to the bill being considered in the House if an amendment is allowed to reduce the judge's salary.

Mr. HEPBRUN. I will agree to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that on investigation he finds that the bill against which the point of order was made the other day and which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill in charge of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN], which has just been passed. The present bill is subject to the same point of order if made. If the point of order is not made the bill will be considered in the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. The bill has been read before.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let it be read again.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all that portion of the State of California now comprised in the counties of San Diego, San Bernardino, Los Angeles, Ventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, Fresno, Tulare, and Kern is hereby detached from the United States judicial district of California, and made a separate judicial district, called the southern district of California.

SEC. 2. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States, respectively, shall be held at Los Angeles, in said southern district of California, beginning on the second Monday in August and the second Monday in January in each year.

SEC. 4. That the circuit or district court for either of said districts may, in its discretion, order special terms, and order a grand or petit jury, or both, to attend the same, by an order to be entered of record twenty days before the day at which said special term shall be ordered to convene; and said courts, respectively, at such special terms shall have all the powers that they have at a regular term appointed by law: Provided, however, That no special term of said circuit court for either district shall be appointed except by and with the concurrence and consent of either the circuit judge or circuit justice.

SEC. 5. That all suits and other proceedings of every kind and nature now pending in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of California shall be tried and disposed of in the circuit and district courts respectively, for said northern district of California as the same would have been if this act had not been passed, and for that purpose jurisdiction is reserved to said courts in the said northern district of California; and the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the present district of California shall retain the records and files of said courts at the city of San Francisco, and do and perform all the duties appertaining to the said offices, respectively, within said northern district, except as hereinafter provided; and all process returnable to or proceedings noticed for any term of the present circuit or district court of California shall be deemed returnable to the next term of said courts, respectively, in the said northern district, as fixed by this act.

SEC. 6. That upon application of any party to any suit or proceeding now pending in the present circuit or district court of the present district of California, which would have been commenced in the proper court for the southern district of California if this act had been in force at the time of the commencement thereof, the proper court shall order that the same be removed for further proceedings to the proper court for said southern district, at the cost of the party applying for such removal; and thereupon the clerk shall transmit certified copies of all the papers, and of all orders and records made therein, to the clerk of the court to which suit or proceedings shall be removed, and all other proceedings shall be had in said court to which the same shall be removed as if said suit or proceeding had originally been commenced therein.

SEC. 7. That the passage of this act shall not have the effect to destroy or impair the lien of any judgment or decree rendered in the circuit or district court of the United States for the present district of California prior to this act taking effect; and final process on any judgment or decree entered in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of California, or which shall be entered therein prior to this act taking effect, and all other process for the enforcement of any order of said courts, respectively, in any cause or proceeding now pending therein, except on proceedings removed as herein provided, shall be issued and made returnable to the proper court for the said northern district of California, and may be directed to and executed by the marshal of the United States for the said northern district in any part of the State of California.

SEC. 8. That there shall be appointed a district judge for said southern district of California, who shall reside therein, and who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, payable quarterly from the Treasury; and there shall also be appointed a marshal and attorney of the United States for said southern district of California, who shall, respectively, receive such fees and compensation and exercise such powers and duties as are now fixed and enjoined by law.

SEC. 9. That the circuit and district judges of said southern district of California shall each, respectively, appoint a clerk for their respective courts, who shall reside and keep their office at Los Angeles, in said district, and who shall receive such fees and compensation for services performed by them, respectively, as are now fixed by law. The same person may be appointed clerk of both courts.

SEC. 10. That either of the clerks of the circuit and district courts for the said northern district of California is hereby authorized, at the request of the district judge of said southern district, and at the cost of the parties requiring the same, to make transcripts of any of the records, files, or papers of the district and circuit courts of the United States remaining in the office of the clerks of the present district of California, and of all matters and proceedings which relate to or concern liens upon or titles to real estate situated in said southern district; and such transcripts, when so made by either of said clerks, shall be certified to be true and correct by the clerk making the same, and the same, when so made and certified, and filed in the proper court, shall constitute the record in such court, and shall be evidence in all courts and places equally with said originals.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall in any manner affect the tenure of office of the judge, marshal, United States attorney, or other officers of the present district of California, who shall, respectively, be entitled to the same salaries, fees, and emoluments now received by them.

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the eighth section of the bill. That section provides "that there shall be appointed a district judge for such southern district of California, who shall reside therein, and who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, payable quarterly from the Treasury." I wish to move to reduce the salary there to $4,000. I think that $3,500 would be the proper sum; but I suggest that the amount be made $4,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there will be no objection to that on the part of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "quarterly," in line 4 of section 8, and to substitute "monthly," so as to make the payment in this case conform to the usual rule.

The amendment was agreed to.

The previous question was ordered upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill; and being engrossed, the bill was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEPBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN STATES.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill No. 71, for the benefit of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, and Nevada when a Territory, and I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of War, in adjusting the claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, and Nevada when a Territory, arising under acts of Congress approved July 27, 1861, and June 27, 1882 (United States Statutes, volume 12, page 276, and volume 22, page 111), shall find that any original paper relating to the claims of said States, as provided for in said acts, shall have been lost, destroyed, or missing, upon proof thereof a copy thereof, and copies of all documents and papers relating thereto, may be certified by the proper State officers of such State having custody of such papers under their seals of office; and such evidence, and all other competent secondary evidence, when filed with the Secretary of the Treasury or Secretary of War, shall be received by them in lieu of such lost original papers, and used in evidence in the adjustment of their said claims in all respects as said original.

The Committee on the Judiciary proposed to amend the bill as follows:

1. Strike out the words "and copies of documents and papers relating thereto" where they occur in the bill.

2. Strike out the following words where they occur in the bill: "and all other competent secondary evidence."

3. Add as a second section of the bill the following words:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to detail three Army officers to assist him in examining and reporting upon the claims of the States and Territory named in the act of June 27, 1882, chapter 241 of the laws of the Forty-seventh Congress; and such officers, before entering upon said duties, shall take and subscribe an oath that they will carefully examine said claims, and that they will, to the best of their ability, make a just and impartial statement thereof, as required by said act.

The amendments proposed by the committee were severally agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULBERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 2929), and yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the original bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLAND. I object. I shall raise the point of order on this bill that it ought to go to Committee of the Whole. I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the city of Saint Louis and the following-named counties in the State of Missouri shall constitute the eastern judicial district of Missouri, to wit: Saint Louis, Franklin, Gasconade, Jefferson, Crawford, Washington, Saint François, Sainte Genevieve, Dent, Iron, Madison, Perry, Bollinger, Cape Girardeau, Shannon, Reynolds, Wayne, Scott, Carter, Oregon, Ripley, Butler, Stoddard, New Madrid, Mississippi, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Montgomery, Lincoln, Warren, Saint Charles, Macon, Adair, Audrain, Clark, Knox, Lewis, Marion, Monroe, Pike, Ralls, Schuyler, Scotland, Shelby, Putnam, and Randolph. And all the other counties in the State of Missouri shall constitute the western judicial district of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That the eastern judicial district of Missouri is hereby divided into two divisions, which shall be known respectively as the northern and eastern divisions of said eastern district. The city of Saint Louis and the counties of Saint Louis, Franklin, Gasconade, Jefferson, Crawford, Washington, Saint François, Sainte Genevieve, Dent, Iron, Madison, Perry, Bollinger, Cape Girardeau, Shannon, Reynolds, Wayne, Scott, Carter, Oregon, Ripley, Butler, Stoddard, New Madrid, Mississippi, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Montgomery, Lincoln, Warren, and Saint Charles shall constitute the eastern division of said district, the courts for which are now established and held and shall be continued at the city of Saint Louis. The remaining counties within the eastern district shall constitute the northern division of said district, and the courts therefor shall be held at the city of Hannibal, and shall be styled the district court (or the circuit court, as the case may be) of the United States for the northern division of the eastern district of Missouri. The western judicial district of Missouri shall be divided into four divisions, to be known as the Saint Joseph, the western, the central, and the southern divisions. The counties of Clay, Ray, Carroll, Chariton, Sullivan, Jackson, La Fayette, Saline, Cass, Johnson, Bates, Henry, Vernon, and Saint Clair shall constitute the western division, the courts for which shall be continued at Kansas City. The counties of Atchison, Nodaway, Holt, Andrew, Buchanan, Platte, Clinton, Caldwell, Livingston, Grundy, Mercer, Harrison, Daviess, De Kalb, Gentry, Linn, and Worth shall constitute the Saint Joseph division, and the courts therefor shall be held at the city of Saint Joseph, and shall be styled the district court (or the circuit court, as the case may be) of the United States for the Saint Joseph division of the western district of Missouri. The counties of Barton, Cedar, Polk, Dallas, Laclede, Pulaski, Jasper, Dade, Greene, Webster, Wright, Texas, Lawrence, Christian, Douglas, Howell, Newton, Barry, McDonald, Stone, Taney, and Ozark shall constitute the southern division of said western district, the courts for which shall be held at the city of Springfield, and they shall be styled the district court (or circuit court, as the case may be) of the United States for the southern division of the western district of Missouri. The remaining counties within the said western district shall constitute the central division of said district, and the courts therefor shall be continued and held at Jefferson City.

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and there are hereby, established a district and circuit court of the United States in each of the several divisions of the said districts herein created, and in each district there shall be held two terms of both the district and circuit courts in each and every year. The times of holding said terms in each of said divisions shall be fixed without delay by the judge of the district court of the proper district. The district judges for the eastern and western districts of Missouri, each in the divisions of his proper district, and the circuit judge of the United States for the eighth judicial circuit, are hereby required to hold the courts aforesaid. Juries shall be summoned for the additional courts hereby created as now provided by law for the summoning of juries in the said districts.

SEC. 4. That hereafter all suits to be brought in the courts of the United States in Missouri, not of a local nature, shall be brought in the division where the defendants, or either of them, reside; but if there be more than one defendant, and a part of them reside in different divisions or districts of said State, the plaintiff may sue in either division or district where one of such defendants resides, and send duplicate writs to the other division or district, directed to the marshal of said district, on which said writs shall be indorsed, by the plaintiff or his attorney, that the same is a duplicate of the original writ sued out of the court of the proper division and district. Any cause may, by the written consent of both parties or their attorneys of record, be transferred to the court of either division or district, without regard to the residence of the defendants, and whether such cause be now pending or be instituted hereafter. All civil causes now pending in any of the courts in said eastern or western district, or any division thereof, against parties residing in some other division hereby created, may remain and be finally disposed of in the court in which they are now pending, respectively, unless the defendants therein shall desire to have the same transferred to the appropriate court of the division in which they reside, in which last event such transfer shall be applied for to the court of the division in which the cause is pending; and when a cause shall be ordered to be transferred, as above provided, to a court in any other division, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court from which the transfer is made to carefully transmit to the clerk of the court to which the transfer is made the entire file of papers of the cause, and all documents and deposits in his court pertaining thereto, together with a certified transcript of the record of all orders, interlocutory decrees, or other entries in the cause; and he shall also certify, under seal of the court, that the papers sent are all which are on file in said court belonging to the cause, for the performance of which duties said clerk so transmitting and certifying shall receive the same fees as now allowed by law for similar services, to be taxed in the bill of costs and regularly collected with the other costs of the cause; and such transcript, when so certified shall henceforth constitute a part of the record of the cause in the suit.

SEC. 5. That there shall be appointed a clerk for each of said courts at Hannibal, Saint Joseph, and Springfield, and each clerk shall be a resident of the division in which the court of which he is clerk is held; he shall keep an office, and the records, files, and documents pertaining to the court of his division, and he shall discharge all the duties and receive the fees required or allowed by law. And the marshals and the district attorneys for the said eastern and western judicial districts shall be the marshal and attorney, respectively, for the divisions for their respective district, and shall be allowed the same fees and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as may be provided by law; that process issuing out of the courts of either division of said districts shall be directed to the marshal of the district in which the division is located, and may be executed by him or his deputies upon the party or parties against whom issued wherever found within his district; and the marshal of each district shall keep an office and at least one general deputy residing at the place of holding courts in each division, excepting the division in which he may himself reside.

SEC. 6. That all causes and proceedings in law, equity, or bankruptcy now pending in any district or circuit court of the United States in the State of Missouri, where all the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from the residence of the plaintiffs) shall reside in either of the divisions in which courts are hereby established, shall be transferred to the court of the division in which the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from their residence) reside; and the transfer may be made in vacation or in term-time. If made in vacation, an affidavit of all the parties defendant that they are resident in said division shall be filed, and ten days' notice of the purpose and time of hearing of said motion shall be given the opposite party or his attorney of record; but if made in term-time, then on motion and affidavit only. And the said circuit and district courts for said divisions shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, with the same right to parties to prosecute appeals and writs of error thereupon, as now pertain to the district and circuit courts for said eastern and western judicial districts. All prosecutions for crimes and offenses heretofore committed shall be commenced and prosecuted in the division where they were committed.

SEC. 7. That before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Saint Joseph he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Buchanan County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building of the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Saint Joseph, at which time the courts shall be held and said offices established in said public building; and before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Hannibal he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Marion County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building belonging to the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Hannibal, at which time the courts shall be held and said offices established in said public building; and before the court or judge shall fix the terms of said courts at Springfield he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Greene County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman makes his point of order, I desire to state that one or two members of the Missouri delegation did not expect that this bill would be considered to-day, and have asked the friends of the bill to consent that it be postponed to a day to be named, in order that they may have an opportunity of looking into it and conferring further among themselves in relation to it. With the view of securing harmony in the delegation in regard to this bill, which affects the State of Missouri alone, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be postponed to a day in the near future. I will name a day that will not interfere with any special order already fixed. I hope that the House will consent to this postponement, and when we come to consider the bill I think a very few minutes will dispose of it. I now ask unanimous consent that this bill be postponed to a day in May which we will agree upon later.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if unanimous consent is given for the postponement of the bill without the point of order being presented, it will then be too late to present the point of order, because postponement will be consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I think we had better dispose of the bill now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The bill can be postponed with the point of order pending.

Mr. BLAND. I object to any postponement of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] objects. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for holding additional courts, and for impaneling additional juries, which will involve additional expense to the Federal Government; and I therefore make my point of order under the third clause of Rule XXIII:

"All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole.

The expense of summoning and paying these jurors will of course require an appropriation of money and necessitate a tax upon the people. The bill further provides that cases shall be commenced in these new districts, and that cases in the present district shall be transferred. The bill is peremptory in that respect. The last clause of the bill, however, as if with the purpose of avoiding expense for court-houses or places of holding courts, provides that unless the county courts in the counties designated shall provide places for holding court the circuit and district judges may refuse to fix terms of court there. But the bill itself is peremptory in regard to the bringing of suits in these new districts, and also peremptory as to the transfer of cases from the present districts to the new districts.

The SPEAKER. Does the bill provide that the United States shall pay the expense of the transfer?

Mr. BLAND. It provides that these cases shall be transferred, and simply leaves it to the county courts to provide the places of holding court. This may necessitate or involve an expense to the Government in providing places for holding these courts. Certainly Congress has no jurisdiction over the county courts of the States; and the officers of the United States whose duty it may be to provide for holding courts will be compelled to provide these places in order to give litigants an opportunity of being heard, for the bill specifically says that criminal cases shall be tried in these districts when the crime has been committed there, and that civil cases shall be begun there, and that cases in the existing district shall be transferred to these courts. Consequently, whether these county courts provide the places for holding the courts or do not do so, the bill imposes expense upon the Federal Government, and hence it "involves a tax or charge upon the people," and should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. It will be impossible to carry out the provisions of this bill without an appropriation for that purpose. As I have remarked, it will be discretionary with the county courts to provide places for holding court, and if these county courts should refuse to make provision for the purpose the expense must fall upon the United States and thereby a tax be imposed upon the people.

The SPEAKER. The bill seems to provide that terms of court shall not be held in these counties unless the county court shall provide the necessary accommodations.

Mr. HATCH. That is a provision of existing law, and one which has always been enforced.

Mr. BLAND. The bill provides simply that the judges may not fix terms of court at these points until places for holding the court are provided. But other portions of the bill, as the Speaker will observe, are peremptory as to the holding of courts; and cases must be brought within the limits of the jurisdiction fixed.

The SPEAKER. The seventh section provides that—

Before the court or judge shall fix the terms of said courts at Springfield he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Greene County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor.

And a similar provision is made in regard to holding terms of court at Hannibal.

Mr. HATCH. The provision is mandatory. It provides that terms of court shall not be held there until the necessary accommodations are provided by the county court.

Mr. BLAND. But the bill also provides for the summoning of jurors and the payment of deputy marshals, for which, of course, appropriations must be made, and thereby a charge imposed upon the people.

Mr. HATCH. That is already provided for by law.

Mr. BLAND. The third section provides that—

Juries shall be summoned for the additional courts hereby created as now provided by law for the summoning of juries in the said districts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, however, to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to the rule which has heretofore been adhered to in the decision of questions of this kind. It has been uniformly held that before a point of order of this character can be sustained it must appear with certainty that an additional appropriation will be required to execute the law if the bill should be passed. Now, it is true that this bill provides for summoning jurors and for holding courts at these additional places in certain contingencies; that is in case the county authorities provide the necessary rooms, offices, &c. But all these courts are to be held merely for the purpose of transacting the judicial business in what now constitutes one district. Civil and criminal proceedings are to be commenced in these courts; but the Chair has no means of determining that the creation of these courts will not in fact diminish the cost of litigation instead of increasing it.

It often, as the Chair knows, diminishes the costs of litigation to the citizens and the Government to have courts convenient to litigants and convenient for the trial of criminals and penal cases.

The Chair is not able to see in this bill any provision which makes it absolutely certain the cost of judicial proceedings in this Territory will be increased. On the contrary, it may be contended, and probably would be, by gentlemen it will be diminished. When it does not appear on the face of the bill that additional appropriations will be required, but is merely a matter of argument, the Chair can not decide that such will necessarily be the case.

Mr. BLAND. Only three grand juries are required now and this bill requires six.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HATCH. I hope my colleague will now withdraw his objection, and allow the bill to be postponed until Saturday, May 29.

The SPEAKER. That has already been assigned.

Mr. HATCH. Then say Wednesday, the 26th.

The SPEAKER. That day also has been assigned.

Mr. BLAND. We had better conclude this bill; and I send up to the Clerk's desk a memorial to be read as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk proceeded to read the memorial.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of order. My colleague did not have the floor for the purpose of having anything read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked to have it read, and there was no objection. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman yielded the floor to me, but the Chair did not hear it.

Mr. HEPBURN. For as much time as the gentleman should need.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose to ask to have a certain memorial read, no other gentleman seeking the floor.

Mr. BLAND. My desire was to show the House the nature of the opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, by the usage of the House, is entitled to be heard first in support of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I will have the memorial read in my own time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yielded the floor to the gentleman from Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Iowa desired to present a substitute?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The substitute, then, will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Substitute for H. R. 2929.]

Any cause may, by the written consent of both parties or their attorneys of record, be transferred to the court of either division or district without regard to the residence of the defendants, and whether such cause be now pending or be instituted hereafter. All civil causes now pending in any of the courts in said eastern or western district, or any division thereof, against parties residing in some other division hereby created, may remain and be finally disposed of in the court in which they are now pending, respectively, unless the defendants therein shall desire to have the same transferred to the appropriate court of the division in which they reside, in which last event such transfer shall be applied for to the court of the division in which the cause is pending; and when a cause shall be ordered to be transferred, as above provided, to a court in any other division it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court from which the transfer is made to carefully transmit to the clerk of the court to which the transfer is made the entire file of papers of the cause, and all documents and deposits in his court pertaining thereto, together with a certified transcript of the record of all orders; interlocutory decrees, or other entries in the cause; and he shall also certify under seal of the court that the papers sent are all which are on file in said court belonging to the cause, for the performance of which duties said clerk so transmitting and certifying shall receive the same fees as now allowed by law for similar services, to be taxed in the bill of costs and regularly collected with the other costs of the cause; and such transcript, when so certified and received, shall thenceforth constitute a part of the record of the cause in the court to which the transfer shall be made.

That all causes and proceedings in law, equity, or bankruptcy now pending in any district or circuit court of the United States in the State of Missouri, where all the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from the residence of the plaintiffs) shall reside in either of the divisions in which courts are hereby established, shall be transferred to the court of the division in which the defendants (or plaintiffs, where the jurisdiction is derived from their residence) reside; and the transfer may be made in vacation or in term time. If made in vacation, an affidavit of all the parties defendant that they are resident in said division shall be filed, and ten days' notice of the purpose and time of hearing of said motion shall be given the opposite party or his attorney of record; but if made in term time, then on motion and affidavit only. such prosecution hereafter commenced shall be commenced and prosecuted in the division where the offenses were committed.

SEC. 7. That before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Saint Joseph he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Buchanan County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building belonging to the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Saint Joseph, at which time the courts shall be held and said offices established in said public building; and before the judge shall fix the terms of courts at Hannibal he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Marion County has provided and set apart for the use of said courts a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent thereof, to be used and occupied until the completion of the public building belonging to the United States Government now in process of construction at said city of Hannibal, at which time the courts shall be held and said offices established in said public building; and before the court or judge shall fix the terms of said court at Springfield he shall have satisfactory evidence that the county court of Greene County has provided and set apart for the use of said court a court-room, clerk's office, marshal's office, and attorney's office, free of expense to the United States for rent therefor.

Mr. CLARDY. I would like to have some gentleman explain wherein that differs from the bill of the committee.

Mr. HATCH. I will undertake to do that. Now, to carry out the suggestion made by me when I asked unanimous consent and in order that I may do everything in my power with the friends of the bill to secure harmonious action on the part of the delegation, I will move the bill be postponed until Thursday, the 13th day of May, and be made the special order for that day. There is no other special order for that day, and I hope it will be agreed to. Of course it is not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The only motion which can be made is a simple motion to postpone indefinitely or to a day certain. It rests with the gentlemen having charge of the bill when the day arrives to say whether they will call it up or not.

Mr. HATCH. I move its postponement until the 13th day of May next.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not to be called up if it interferes with existing prior orders.

Mr. HATCH. Do you mean prior orders?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. Of course, I will not.

Mr. BLAND. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLAND. I rise for the purpose of debating it, and ask that the memorial be read in my time.

Mr. HATCH. I have not yielded the floor, Mr. Speaker. I was simply answering the question of the gentleman from Georgia, who wanted to know the scope of the motion made by me. I am not through.

I move the postponement of the bill to Thursday, May 13, with the statement I have made; and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think the gentleman had the floor for that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had not yielded the floor, as he states. If the previous question is ordered there will be thirty minutes for debate, fifteen on each side.

Mr. BLAND. I would prefer to have an hour.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND (from his seat). No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that no gentleman rose in his place and addressed the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. I now rise and make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

Mr. GLOVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 64.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places.

ISSUE OF SMALL BILLS FOR CIRCULATION.

Before the count was completed,

Mr. MILLER. While this count is going on I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to suspend the present proceedings and introduce a resolution, which will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, May 20, 1886, be set apart for the consideration of House bill 5788, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House, not to interfere with general appropriation bills, bills raising revenue, or previous orders; and if for any reason said bill should not be considered, or the consideration thereof completed on that day, that this order shall continue from day to day until said bill is finally disposed of.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. HALSELL. Mr. Speaker, pending the count I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 11th day of May, 1886, after the reading of the Journal, be fixed for the consideration of House bill 2851, to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, the order not to interfere with general appropriation or revenue bills or special orders heretofore made by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

There was no objection.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The business from the Committee on the Public Lands should also be excepted.

Mr. HALSELL. All prior orders are excepted.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the title of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It refers to certain private land bills.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HALSELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STORM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 53, noes 45.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, before announcing the result of the vote, I wish to say that the friends of the bill have no desire to antagonize this motion so late in the evening of Saturday and punish our own friends in the effort to secure a quorum; but I want to give notice to the House and to these four gentlemen, or to the two only, who are obstructing the bill, that neither two nor four men can beat a worthy and meritorious bill such as this when the entire House of Representatives is against them; and I give notice that I will call it up at the first opportunity for consideration. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

MONDAY, April 26, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. Washington C. Whitthorne, appointed a Senator by the governor of Tennessee to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Jackson, late a Senator from that State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the credentials, as follows:

The State of Tennessee, William B. Bate, governor, to all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know ye that, whereas a vacancy in the Senate of the Congress of the United States from Tennessee exists, by reason of the resignation of Hon. Howell E. Jackson, a duly elected and qualified Senator from Tennessee, and the same having been officially certified to me by the Clerk of the Senate of the United States:

Now therefore I, William B. Bate, governor of the State of Tennessee, by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, do commission Hon. Washington C. Whitthorne, a citizen and inhabitant of Tennessee, to fill said office of Senator in the United States Congress, agreeably to the Constitution and laws, during the term, with all the powers, privileges, and emoluments thereunto appertaining by law.

In testimony whereof I, William B. Bate, governor as aforesaid, have hereunto set my hand, and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at the department in Nashville, on this 16th day of April, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] WM. B. BATE.

By the governor:

JOHN ALLISON, Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator appointed will please come forward and take the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. WHITTHORNE advanced to the chair of the President pro tempore, escorted by Mr. HARRIS, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it did not seem to me proper to make any objection to the taking of the oath by the Senator appointed who has just presented himself, because the authority of the governor is unquestioned; but I wish to call public attention to the fact that this credential (and I think the same is true of past credentials presented to the Senate in the case of an appointment by a State executive) sets forth an assumption of authority by the executive beyond the time for which it is conferred upon him by the Constitution and laws of the United States. This is a certificate that the governor has appointed a successor of Mr. Jackson during his "term," when it should read "until the next meeting of the Legislature."

Mr. HARRIS. Still does it not refer to the term as fixed by law?

Mr. HOAR. That is not a "term" in the ordinary sense of the word. I merely thought it better to call attention to it. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] had a form of credential prepared and carefully submitted, for an election, which I think it would be well for the State Legislatures to follow; and there are forms in the Senate for an appointment by a State executive which I think it would be well for the governors of States to follow.

This is a very unimportant matter now, and I did not call attention to it until after the Senator had taken the oath; but at some period of a close contest for party supremacy in the Senate when points of this kind are started there might a considerable difficulty arise by following this precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be placed upon file.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting a letter from the Solicitor-General, recommending an appropriation of $3,500 to place the fifth floor of the Department of Justice building in a condition for occupancy; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented two memorials of Knights of Labor of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of citizens of Northern Idaho, praying for the annexation of the Pan Handle of Idaho Territory to Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Dalles City, Oreg., praying that increased appropriations be made for the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a memorial of Knights of Labor of Grand Junction, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of the free-ship bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition, signed by 160 citizens of Fairfield, Iowa, and a petition, signed by 50 citizens of Fairfield, Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill to organize the Territory of Oklahoma and for the opening up of unoccupied lands therein to settlement; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition, signed by the board of supervisors of Monroe County, Iowa, and several county officers of that county and a large number of citizens of the county, praying for the passage of House bill No. 4792, for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States, of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States for claims thereunder. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANFORD presented a memorial of the California and Oregon Land Company, assignee of the Oregon Central Military Road Company, setting forth that the conditions upon which the Congressional grant of lands was made to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of its road were duly performed, and praying that the title be not disturbed; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Knights of Labor of North Adams, Mass., praying that liberal appropriations be made for works of internal improvement, and especially for the construction of the Hennepin Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Mechanic's Falls, Me., praying for the construction of a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Rockport, Mass.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of a bill providing for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma and that the unoccupied lands therein be opened to homestead settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. I also present a petition of the delegates to District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor, of the city of Washington, D. C., in regard to the pay of firemen in this District; and as the petition is short I ask that it be read, omitting the names. I will state that the matter to which it refers is under consideration now by the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask that the petition be referred to that committee.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

DISTRICT ASSEMBLY No. 66, KNIGHTS OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., April 22, 1886.

To the Senate of the United States:

The undersigned, delegates to District Assembly No. 66, Knights of Labor, request the Senate to fix the pay of the fire department of the District of Columbia at $1,000 per annum for privates, firemen, tillermen, and drivers, and at $1,200 per annum for foremen, engineers, and fire marshal.

This service demands and has secured the best of courage, strength, intelligence, and moral character; it exacts unceasing duty and involves extreme personal danger.

The present pay is below the earnings of capable mechanics in many of our trades and much lower than it is in other cities. Justice requires that the moderate increase above specified should be granted.

If a democratic system existed here we, as employers of the men in the fire department, would be willing and able to give them fair pay. In the absence of such a system we respectfully request the Senate to do what the employés of the fire department and their fellow-citizens mutually desire.

Mr. HEARST presented resolutions of the Legislature of California; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 25 (adopted March 5, 1885).

Whereas the law of July 27, 1861, and the "Joint and declaratory resolution" of March 8, 1862, provided for the reimbursement to the States of all sums by them expended in defense of the United States; and

Whereas under the interpretation of said original act of 1861, made two days after its passage by the Secretary of the Treasury, the States were led to believe that if they, respectively, borrowed money on their own account and advanced it to the United States, under the conditions mentioned in said law, that said sums, together with the interest paid thereon, would be refunded to them, that having been the practice of the United States in such cases for more than sixty years; and

Whereas acting under this impression and belief, many of the States did borrow moneys and advance them to the United States, and paid interest thereon from their own resources; and

Whereas the principal has, in a great measure, been refunded by the United States to the States advancing said moneys; still, the interest paid by such States, as aforesaid, has not been refunded; and

Whereas it is held by the Treasury Department, through which such reimbursement settlements are made, that specific legislation will be required to justify the payment of such interest; and

Whereas Congress has always heretofore provided, specifically, for the payment of interest on such advances made in any war, either foreign or Indian, beginning with the act of March 3, 1825, to reimburse Virginia for interest on advances made during the war of 1812, to that of March 3, 1881, to reimburse California on account of similar expenditures made in one of her Indian wars; and

Whereas during the late war, and under authority of said "reimbursement" acts of 1861, and 1862, the State of California advanced to the United States money which she borrowed, and on which she paid interest, and which interest has in no part been refunded by the United States, but is now justly due the State; and

Whereas there are now pending in both branches of the present Congress measures designed to authorize the settlement of the claims of the several States for such interest (being S. 2000 and H. R. 2463), and which said measures have been reported on by the committees to which they were referred, in both Houses, in unanimously favorable reports: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to give their active support to said bills, or to others having the same object in view, and to use their best endeavors, in co-operation with the agent of this State and in support of his efforts, to thus secure to the State the amounts by her expended, as aforesaid.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution be sent by the governor of this State to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to our State agent.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 26, requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to give their support to certain measures now pending in Congress, or such as may hereafter be presented thereto, designed to effect the proper adjustment of the accounts of the different States, Territories, and the District of Columbia with the United States arising out of the proceedings under the "direct-tax" law of August 5, 1861 (adopted March 3, 1885).

Whereas under the provisions of the law of August 5, 1861, a direct tax of $20,000,000 was levied for war purposes by the United States and apportioned to the various States and Territories of the Union and the District of Columbia, according to their respective populations; and

Whereas the amount of said tax so apportioned to the State of California was paid by the State in conformity with the provisions of said law; and

Whereas while part of the other States and Territories and the District of Columbia have, like California, paid in full the tax thus apportioned to them, respectively, many of those remaining have only paid in part, and some have paid nothing at all; and

Whereas by reason of such partial collection of said taxes (as shown by the official letter of the Secretary of the Treasury dated June 14, 1884) over $5,000,000 of the same remains unpaid, and now stands charged on the books of the Treasury against the States and Territories delinquent, according to the measure of their respective delinquencies; and

Whereas while, by act of Congress, the operation of said law as to the collection of said tax has long been suspended, still the interest and penalties thereby required to be collected have been permitted to accumulate, until now the amount of the original levy, where delinquent, has almost quadrupled; and

Whereas to enforce collection of such unpaid tax, penalties, and costs would, in the language of the Secretary of the Treasury, "put a grievous burden upon the people of the States which are in default of payment;" and therefore, in the words of the Comptroller of the Treasury, "it is believed that there is no desire now, on the part of any class of citizens, that the payment of this tax should be enforced;" and

Whereas it is contemplated by the Constitution of the United States, and is required by the principles of common justice, that "taxes shall be uniform throughout the United States," and that it would be violative of both to compel the payment of such levy by part of the United States and Territories while others were exempt from such burden; and

Whereas measures are now pending in both branches of the present Congress (being House bill No. 110 and Senate No. 795) which provide for the adjustment of this whole question, by authorizing the refunding to the States and Territories which have paid any or all of said tax the amount so paid, and the cancellation of all charges on account of delinquency against such States and Territories as have not paid the same; and

Whereas the method of adjustment proposed by said bills has the hearty approval and indorsement of the Secretary and Comptroller of the Treasury, to whom said bills were referred by the committees of Congress considering the same for their efficient examination and report; and

Whereas approving said plan of adjustment as being in its nature a measure of relief to the States in default and one of simple justice to those which have paid, and in view of the important interests therein involved to the State of California: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate (the assembly concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to urge the passage of the bills hereinbefore referred to, or other measures having the same object in view, and to use their best endeavors, in co-operation with the agent of this State and in support of his efforts, to thus secure to the State the amount paid by her on account of said tax.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of the above preamble and resolution be sent by the governor of this State to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and to our State agent.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Department of State.

I, Thomas L. Thompson, secretary of state of the State of California, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate concurrent resolutions Nos. 25 and 26, adopted by the Legislature of the State of California March 5, 1885, with the original now on file in my office, and that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof. Also that this authentication is in due form and by the proper officer.

Witness my hand and the great seal of State, at office in Sacramento, Cal., the 9th day of April, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] T. L. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

By A. E. SHATTUCK, Deputy.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of citizens of Kershaw County, South Carolina, praying for the passage of the educational bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2410) for the addition of a third story to the public building in Dallas, Tex., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6980) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Jackson, Tenn., and to reappropriate an unexpended balance therefor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORGAN. In behalf of the minority of the committee I submit an amendment to the bill, which I ask be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed; and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 319) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company "to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

COURT OF ALABAMA CLAIMS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill extending the time for the completion of the records of the clerk of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims and the transfer of the same to the Department of State.

The bill (S. 2239) extending the time for the completion of the records of the clerk of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims and the transfer of the same to the Department of State, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. It is very important that that bill should become a law before the 1st of May, and I ask leave to have it considered at the present time. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the powers of the clerk of the late Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, as extended by section 2 of the act of Congress relating thereto, approved June 3, 1884, be, and they hereby are, extended for an additional period, not to exceed two months from and after the 30th day of April, 1886, for the purpose of closing up the business of his office, and for depositing the records, documents, and all other papers of the court or its officers in the office of the Secretary of State, as provided in the act re-establishing said court, and the act therein referred to, and said clerk is hereby authorized to employ such assistants as he may deem necessary for the purpose of enabling him to carry into effect the provisions of this act, not to exceed in number those heretofore employed, said assistants to be paid monthly, at the same rate of compensation heretofore paid them, on vouchers certified by said clerk, under the direction of the Secretary of State, from said Geneva award fund; and all disbursements shall be made by said clerk, under the direction of the Secretary of State.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BONDS OF BREWERS.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 444) to amend section 3336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it with an amendment.

As it is very important that this bill should pass before the 1st of May, the time when the bonds are given by brewers to which the bill relates, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS and others. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to amend section 3336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

SEC. 3336. Every brewer, on filing notice as aforesaid of his intention to commence or continue business, shall execute a bond to the United States, to be approved by the collector of the district, in a sum equal to three times the amount of the tax which, in the opinion of the collector, said brewer will be liable to pay during any one month, and conditioned that he shall pay, or cause to be paid, as herein provided, the tax required by law on all beer, lager-beer, ale, porter, and other fermented liquors made by of for him, before the same is sold or removed for consumption or sale, except as hereinafter provided; and that he shall keep, or cause to be kept, a book, in the manner and for the purposes hereinafter specified, which shall be open to inspection by the proper officers, as by law required; and that he shall in all respects faithfully comply, without fraud or evasion, with all requirements of law relating to the manufacture and sale of any malt liquors aforesaid; and he shall execute a new bond whenever required so to do by said collector, in the amount above named and conditioned as above provided, which bond shall be in lieu of any former bond or bonds of such brewer in respect to all liabilities accruing after its approval by said collector.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that the only change in the House bill proposed by the Committee on Finance is to provide that instead of the bonds being given every year they shall be given whenever required by the collector, and that the bonds shall be given as often as once in four years. It is a very short time for the bill to go back to the other House and be acted upon there before the 1st of May. It may be somewhat questionable whether the amendment of the committee ought to be adhered to, but I leave it for other members of the committee to say what they choose about it.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator has explained how the bill as amended by the Committee on Finance changes the proposition as it came from the other House. Will he explain how the proposition submitted by the House differs from the existing statute?

Mr. MORRILL. The proposition of the House of Representatives differs from the existing statute in this, that the existing law provides that these bonds shall be given every year on the 1st of May. That is thought to be a great inconvenience for parties continuing in business. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance is that the bonds shall not only be renewed at the demand of the collector, but that they shall be certainly renewed once in four years.

Mr. DAWES. The bill as passed by the other House proposes that the brewers shall give a bond once for all unless required to give a new one.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; and the bill also increases the sum from twice the amount that is supposed will be collectible every month to three times the amount. So it makes the bond a very good one.

So far as I have been able to consult the members of the Finance Committee since reporting the bill they adhere to the amendment made. I shall therefore ask a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I desire to hear the amendment read before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 22, after the word "bond," the committee report to insert the words "once in four years and;" so as to read:

And that he shall in all respects faithfully comply, without fraud or evasion, with all requirements of law relating to the manufacture and sale of any malt liquors aforesaid; and he shall execute a new bond once in four years, and whenever required so to do by said collector, in the amount above named and conditioned as above provided, which bond shall be in lieu of any former bond or bonds of such brewer in respect to all liabilities accruing after its approval by said collector.

Mr. BECK. I believe that amendment was passed by the committee last Saturday morning.

Mr. MORRILL. It was on Friday.

Mr. BECK. It so happened that I was called to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Finance at the same time, and did not reach the Committee on Finance to hear the amendment discussed, and I was not aware until this moment that it had passed. I thought when the committee met at its regular meeting we had agreed to pass the brewers' bill, as it is called, just as it came from the other House, because the bonds have to be renewed by the 1st of May or great confusion will then ensue. The report of the House committee accompanying the bill reads thus:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 444) entitled "An act to amend section 3336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," respectfully reports:

That it has considered said bill, and hereby reports it with the recommendation that it do pass. It relieves the brewers from an unnecessary renewal of bonds without in any sense impairing the security given to the United States.

The committee appends hereto the letter of Mr. Rogers, deputy commissioner, then acting Commissioner.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 3, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copy of H. R. 444, "A bill to amend section 3336 of the United States Revised Statutes," together with letter of Hon. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE, of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, inclosing said copy to me, with request for my recommendation concerning same.

In respect to this matter I have to say, that the purpose of this bill is to relieve brewers from giving annual bonds to the United States to secure the payment of the tax upon fermented liquors as well as to insure the performance of divers other duties, such bonds to be given in a sum equal to twice the amount of tax which in the opinion of the collector the brewer will be liable to pay during any one month, and to substitute for this provision a requirement for the giving of a continuing bond to the United States for like purposes, in a sum equal to three times the amount of the tax which in the opinion of the collector the brewer will be liable to pay in any one month, with a further provision that the brewer shall execute a new bond whenever required so to do by the collector, to be in lieu of any former bond or bonds in respect to all liabilities accruing after its approval.

In reference to a similar bill introduced into the last previous House of Representatives, the opinion expressed by the then Commissioner was to the effect that such a bond, with the right to call for a new bond whenever desirable, was an equivalent for the yearly bond now required by law.

Upon full consideration of this matter I am of the opinion that the view heretofore expressed by this office, above referred to, is correct, and I therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

Respectfully,

H. C. ROGERS, Acting Commissioner.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

With that recommendation the Committee on Finance, as I understood, agreed to order the bill to be reported as it came from the House so that final action could be taken before the 1st day of May and the brewers could go on with their business. This amendment, agreed upon in committee last Friday and now asked to be voted upon, would make it impossible for brewers to comply with that requirement before the 1st day of May, when their business begins. I have a letter, which I expected to lay before the committee to-morrow at their regular meeting, from an exceedingly well-informed man in regard to this business, which reads thus:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 25, 1886.

Hon. JAMES B. BECK, United States Senate:

DEAR SIR: H. R. bill No. 444, which passed the House unanimously last Friday, has been amended in Committee by Senator SHERMAN so as to make the bond renewable every four years instead of at the option of the collector. The amendment makes the bill almost valueless, as it compels the brewers to give during the first four years three bonds, with higher instead of four bonds with smaller securities. Senator MORRILL is instructed to call up the amended bill to-morrow. If thus amended it passes the Senate it is nigh impossible that it will go through the House before May 1, and the brewers have before that day to renew their bonds under the present law. If the new bill passes after May 1 they will have to give a new bond, and before the expiration of four years another one, making three altogether. That would be hardly worth the trouble.

The bill before the Senate was drawn two years ago by Solicitor Chesley, and recommended by two Secretaries (Folger and Manning) and two Commissioners (Evans and Miller). It gives the collectors power to call for new bonds at any time. Besides, the bond is to be one-third larger, thus securing the Government more strongly. They are satisfied, and why should not Senator SHERMAN be? I inclose report from Ways and Means Committee.

Since 1862 only $3,200 have been collected on brewers' bonds, and that was during the first two years from some small brewers. The bonds are entirely superfluous, as the Government has ample security otherwise.

I beg you to endeavor to pass the bill as it came from the House.

I thought that view was agreed to by the committee. That is what I shall vote for. I believe the reasons given by both Commissioners and by the Committee on Ways and Means make it unnecessary to adopt the amendment, because the Commissioner can call for a new bond at any moment, without making a compulsory demand upon those people and unnecessarily delaying the passage of the bill until after the 1st of May, when all would be thrown into confusion. Instead of aiding those people the amendment now offered by the Committee on Finance absolutely deprives them of the benefit which we thought they ought to have and which the other House was endeavoring to give them.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator before he takes his seat—perhaps he has already done it—explain the hardship which the bill proposed to remedy? I am a little rusty.

Mr. BECK. The brewers every year on the 1st of May renew their bonds, which is sometimes a very troublesome matter.

Mr. DAWES. Under existing law the bond is renewed every year?

Mr. BECK Under existing law they have to renew their bonds every year. The bill requires them to give a bond for one-third more than they give at present, or for three times the monthly capacity instead of twice, and it authorizes the Commissioner to require a new bond whenever, in his judgment, one is needed to protect the Government, so that they shall not be required to go over the country every year to work up securities before the 1st of May when there is no necessity for doing so, or at any other given time, but leaves it to the Secretary and his Commissioner to require a new bond whenever he thinks proper.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask to have the amendment reported, that I may know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was, in line 22, after the word "bond," to insert the words "once in four years and."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there will be any difficulty in getting the bill through with the amendment before the 1st day of May. If we pass the bill this morning, it can go to the other House and be agreed to this afternoon. These brewers have hithereto been compelled to give a bond once a year. They think, as I understand, that that is too often, and it is proposed now that they shall only give a bond when required to do so by the collector of the district. That might be very well where collectors are vigilant and active, but suppose a collector is a little negligent of his duties?

Mr. INGALLS. Is the proposition that they shall give a bond whenever thereto required by the Commissioner the House proposition or the proposition of the Senate committee?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the House proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. How does the Committee on Finance propose to amend it?

Mr. ALLISON. We add that it shall be done once in four years.

Mr. INGALLS. At least once in four years?

Mr. ALLISON. At least once in four years. So it seems to me that the brewers can without any great difficulty give this bond once in four years, and thus enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to overhaul at that time the entire range of the bonds of the brewers. I think the amendment is a just one, and I hope it will pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. As I see he is not in his seat I withdraw my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the negative). I voted, but seeing that the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], with whom I am paired, is not here, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] is detained at home on a very sad occasion, and I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote, being paired.

Mr. SABIN. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], and I do not see him in his seat. I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 19; as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSON, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported this morning a bill (H. R. 6980) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Jackson, Tenn., and to reappropriate an unexpended balance therefor. The bill appropriates $7,000 and reappropriates $2,500 more, making in the aggregate $9,500 for the completion of a court-house and post-office in the town of Jackson, Tenn. The work is suspended and can not be resumed until the bill is passed. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider the bill named by him. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the completion of the public building for a court-house and post-office at Jackson, Tenn., there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,000, together with an unexpended balance of $2,525.25 appropriated by the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1885, for the approaches, grading, fencing, and paving for said building.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to inquire how the bill comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It seems to be an appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It is a public building bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no point about it, but a bill of that character, making purely an appropriation, certainly ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC RIVER FLATS.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill (S. 335) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats, in the District of Columbia, passed the House of Representatives April 12 with amendments, and on the 13th of April the bill with the House amendments was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for further consideration. The committee direct me to report the bill back with the recommendation that the Senate do not agree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives, and that a conference be asked, the conferees to be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reports the bill named by him, and moves that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. INGALLS, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

Mr. INGALLS. Accompanying this report are certain papers which it is necessary should be before the conference. I ask that they may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print the accompanying papers will be made if there be no objection.

G. Menocal, United States Navy; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. BLAIR. Last Thursday I gave notice that this morning at the conclusion of the morning business I should ask the Senate to consider Senate joint resolution No. 6, for the purpose of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that a joint resolution be taken up; which will be read by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. I yield for a moment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I merely rise to say that the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes, was under consideration in the morning hour at the last sitting of the Senate, and I proposed to renew its consideration this morning, but the Senator from New Hampshire had given notice that he desired to occupy the morning hour to-day with some remarks on another subject. Under the circumstances, of course, I can not press the consideration of the bill to-day, but I should very much like to have the consent of the Senate that it may be placed as a special order for Tuesday, the 11th day of May, at 2 o'clock. I think the bill will then be out of the way of everything and can be taken up and immediately passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to make the bill (S. 1812), to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands and for other purposes, a special order for May 11, at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. A special order for when?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For Tuesday, the 11th day of May. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill either on the day named by the Senator from Nebraska or on an earlier day, but I object now to making special orders. The Senator from Nebraska will have no difficulty in getting up the bill at any time, because I think it is the sentiment of the Senate that the bill should be considered at as early a day as practicable; but we have already, I may say by almost unanimous consent, agreed to certain orders of business, and I wish to have that order of business first completed before we enter upon any other special order. So I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I should be glad to have him take up his bill at an earlier day than he has named.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well; with that understanding I shall not insist on the request.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. On the 8th of April the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] presented a memorial from the New York Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church relating to the Chinese question, and at my instance it was laid on the table for the time being. I give notice that to-morrow morning after the morning business I shall call up the memorial and move its reference to the appropriate committee, and I should like to detain the Senate for a very short time in making some suggestions in regard to it.

EVIDENCE IN CERTAIN STATE CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 71) for the benefit of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, and Nevada when a Territory.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House, and that a committee of conference be appointed on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DOLPH, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. GRAY were appointed.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BLAIR. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. Res. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. From and after the year of our Lord 1900 the manufacture and sale of distilled alcoholic intoxicating liquors, or alcoholic liquors any part of which is obtained by distillation or process equivalent thereto, or any intoxicating liquors mixed or adulterated with ardent spirits or with any poison whatever, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes, and for use in the arts, anywhere within the United States and the Territories thereof, shall cease; and the importation of such liquors from foreign states and countries to the United States and Territories, and the exportation of such liquors from and the transportation thereof within and through any part of this country, except for the use and purposes aforesaid, shall be, and hereby are, forever thereafter prohibited.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this article shall be construed to waive or abridge any existing power of Congress, nor the right, which is hereby recognized, of the people of any State or Territory to enact laws to prevent the increase and for the suppression or regulation of the manufacture, sale, and use of liquors, and the ingredients thereof, any part of which is alcoholic, intoxicating, or poisonous, within its own limits, and for the exclusion of such liquors and ingredients therefrom at any time, as well before as after the close of the year of our Lord 1900; but until then, and until ten years after the ratification hereof as provided in the next section, no State or Territory shall interfere with the transportation of said liquor or ingredients, in packages safely secured, over the usual lines of traffic, to other States and Territories wherein the manufacture, sale, and use thereof for other purposes and use than those excepted in the first section shall be lawful: Provided, That the true destination of such packages be plainly marked thereon.

SEC. 3. Should this article not be ratified by three-fourths of the States on or before the last day of December, 1890, then the first section hereof shall take effect and be in force at the expiration of ten years from such ratification; and the assent of any State to this article shall not be rescinded nor reversed.

SEC. 4. Congress shall enforce this article by all needful legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I have had the honor to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution which, after it has become a part thereof, will confer the power and impose the duty upon the General Government to co-operate with the States in the suppression of the evils which result from the use of alcohol as a beverage, and which, when ratified by the States, would constitute an express national prohibition of the manufacture and traffic in the more potent forms of that poison and of all admixtures and adulterations of the same, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes, and for use in the arts anywhere within the United States and the Territories thereof.

In addition to this, the proposed amendment would confer upon the States (now fettered by the national Constitution, which gives protection to alcohol in all forms, including of course fermented drinks, wine and cider and all adulterations thereof as articles of property and of interstate and foreign commerce, so that the States are comparatively helpless in the effort for their extinction as dangerous beverages) all the powers of independent nations for expulsion, seizure, and destruction over fermented drinks and adulterations thereof, which are considered by some as less dangerous than the more powerful products of distillation, and which many now believe the States with such enlarged powers could restrain without interference of national law. Should this belief prove to be ill-founded by experience, still further national restriction will be imposed by the people.

This proposition has been pending in Congress since December, 1876. On the 27th day of December in that year, being then a member of the House of Representatives, I discussed the subject at considerable length, and will not trouble the Senate with a repetition of the facts and arguments advanced upon that occasion, and which are so easily accessible to any one who cares to examine them. It will be proper, however, to call attention to the text of the joint resolution and to a statement of certain fundamental propositions upon the truth of which I believe the right and expediency of this change in the Constitution, as well as all legislation, State or national, upon the subject must depend.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. From and after the year of our Lord 1900 the manufacture and sale of distilled alcoholic intoxicating liquors, or alcoholic liquors any part of which is obtained by distillation or process equivalent thereto, or any intoxicating liquors mixed or adulterated with ardent spirits or with any poison whatever, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes, and for use in the arts, anywhere within the United States and the Territories thereof, shall cease; and the importation of such liquors from foreign states and countries to the United States and Territories, and the exportation of such liquors from and the transportation thereof within and through any part of this country, except for the use and purposes aforesaid, shall be, and hereby is, forever thereafter prohibited.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this article shall be construed to waive or abridge any existing power of Congress, nor the right, which is hereby recognized, of the people of any State or Territory to enact laws to prevent the increase and for the suppression or regulation of the manufacture, sale, and use of liquors, and the ingredients thereof, any part of which is alcoholic, intoxicating, or poisonous, within its own limits, and for the exclusion of such liquors and ingredients therefrom at any time, as well before as after the close of the year of our Lord 1900; but until then, and until ten years after the ratification hereof, as provided in the next section, no State or Territory shall interfere with the transportation of said liquors or ingredients, in packages safely secured, over the usual lines of traffic to other States and Territories wherein the manufacture, sale, and use thereof for other purposes and use than those excepted in the first section shall be lawful: Provided, That the true destination of such packages be plainly marked thereon.

SEC. 3. Should this article not be ratified by three-fourths of the States on or before the last day of December, 1890, then the first section hereof shall take effect and be in force at the expiration of ten years from such ratification; and the assent of any State to this article shall not be rescinded nor reversed.

SEC. 4. Congress shall enforce this article by all needful legislation.

I now repeat the propositions referred to, and upon the truth of which I rely:

"In order to justify legislation of any kind restricting the manufacture and use of alcoholic liquors, I believe it to be necessary to maintain these propositions:

"First. That it is the duty of society, through the agency of government, which is the creature of society, to enact and enforce all laws which, while protecting the individual in the full possession and enjoyment of his inalienable rights, tend to promote the general welfare; and especially whenever that welfare is impaired or threatened by any existing or impending evil, it is the duty of society to enact and enforce laws to restrict or destroy that evil. It may be proper to observe that no law can promote the general welfare which deprives an individual of an inalienable right, when that right is properly defined, or which impairs the enjoyment thereof, whether of life, liberty, property, or the pursuit of happiness. But society has inalienable rights as well as individuals, and the right to such legislation as will promote the general welfare, in its true sense, is one of them; and the inalienable rights of individuals and the inalienable rights of society at large are limited by, and must be construed and enjoyed with reference to, each other.

"Second. While society has no right to prevent or restrict the use of an article by individuals for purposes which are beneficial only, yet if that use, beneficial to some, is found by experience to be naturally and inevitably greatly injurious in its effects upon others and upon society in general, then it becomes the duty of society, in the exercise of its inalienable right to promote the general welfare and in self-defense to social life, just as the individual may defend his natural life, to prohibit, regulate, or restrict the use of that article, as the case may require. This principle is daily applied in laws which control the manufacture and use of gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, and other things of great and dangerous potency, the unrestrained use of which, even for useful purposes, has been shown by experience to be destructive to the inalienable rights of others. This results from the common principle of law that every man must so enjoy his own rights as neither to destroy nor impair those of another, and it is the great end for which government is instituted among men to compel him so to do.

"Third. No person has a right to do that to himself which impairs or perverts his own powers; and when he does so by means of that which society can reach and remove by law to such extent as to become a burden or a source of danger to others, either by his example or by his liability to commit acts of crime, or to be essentially incapacitated to discharge his duties to himself, his family, and society, the law, that is, society, should protect both him and itself. A man has no more right to destroy his inalienable rights than those of another, or than another has to deprive him of his own. The laws restraining the spendthrift in the destruction of his inalienable right in property and punishing suicide (as the common law did, by forfeiture of estate, &c.), or attempted self-murder (as the law does now), are familiar examples of the application of this principle.

"These are elementary principles of law and of common sense. They are corner-stones of all just government. To these principles every member of society is held to have given his assent. They are unquestioned, so far as I know, by any one who believes in any law. They are axiomatic and indestructible as the social organization itself.

"Fourth. The use (unless medicinally) of alcoholic liquors to the extent of intoxicating or poisoning—which, as will hereafter be seen, is the same thing as intoxication—is an injury to the individual; it inflicts great evils upon society at large; it is destructive to the general welfare; it is of a nature which may be greatly restricted if not destroyed by the enforcement of appropriate laws; consequently such laws should be enacted and enforced; and this should be done in our country either by the States or by the General Government, or by both, if such laws can be made more efficient thereby."

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS.

I desire at this time less to attempt a summary of fact and argument directly in support of the joint resolution than to offer a few considerations touching the present condition of the great debate upon the liquor traffic which for many years has been so active in all parts of the country; and with the consent of the Senate I will venture a few suggestions which seem likely to compel attention, whether willing or reluctant, from politicians and statesmen and patriots and parties, as well as of this great nation, which embraces them all.

It must be conceded that the use of intoxicating (that is to say, of poisonous) liquors as a beverage is the chief source and immediate cause of more hurt to society and to individuals than any other one agency which can be named. The war of the rebellion cost us fewer lives and less treasure year by year during its term of death and devastation than the nation has sacrificed annually to the Moloch of alcohol during the period which has elapsed since its close. Pestilence has not slain sixty thousand victims in any one year since the settlement of this country. If cholera and small-pox combined should sweep away one hundred thousand of our countrymen in a season, the nation would organize as one vast funeral procession and hang the heavens with the emblems of despair. Famine is with us unknown, or at least unnecessary, and whenever it exists is a crime either of the victim or of the community, and not an excusable misfortune in any case whatever; but in other civilized lands starvation, even during the last fifty years, has occasionally taught mankind that the terrible word can not yet be dropped from the human vocabulary as descriptive of an evil liability to which is extant among men.

Yet it may safely be said that since the battle of Waterloo, now the full period of the life of man, there has been no one year in which the combined suffering and pecuniary losses inflicted upon the Caucasian race by war, pestilence, and famine has equaled the total of destruction chargeable to alcohol in the same lapse of time. Beyond this, the curse of alcohol has been not intermittent and occasional, but perpetual and inexorable, and I think on the whole increasing like the everlasting and unyielding pressure of gravitation and depravity. I have no heart and no time to repeat the familiar mathematical statements which come to us from municipal authorities, from the leading luminaries of all the professions, and from every source of authentic information, by which we learn that at least three-fourths of the pauperism, insanity, and crime, and of the public and private burdens which these great evils impose upon us are directly chargeable to intoxicating drink. Such facts are as familar as corpses upon a battlefield, and seem to attract no more attention.

I hazard nothing in appealing to the consciousness of every one who listens to me to attest that he has seen more of evil flowing from this than from any other one cause during his whole lifetime, and I should hardly fail if I asserted that the personal sorrows and afflictions which he has most to bewail among friends, kindred, and the community where he may dwell are traceable to the same omnipresent curse. Those who preach, preach against it, and those who pray, pray against it. The press recounts its daily crimes and deviltries, and those who drink as well as those who abstain vie with each other in stigmatizing rum as the worst thing there is extant. Yet somehow the old king does most wonderfully hold his own. He is a popular curse. He has a round billion of money invested in his business, one-fortieth of the property and labor of the country producing and distributing death and misery to the American people. His market is as sure as that for cotton, corn, or beef. The unnatural appetite which constitutes the demand has become as insatible and almost as universal as the demand for healthy foods. This appetite descends with the blood, and the parent thus becomes bar-tender, even after death, for his child.

Multitudes bewail the evils of intoxication, attend temperance meetings, sing temperance songs, and pay a dollar a year to help along the blessed cause, and then lease their real estate for saloons, protest against the insertion of prohibition planks in political platforms, lest remonstrance against evil shall upset party supremacy, or, it may be, with upright purpose, influenced by profound discouragement and disgust, they break down and destroy an organization which they created and which belongs to them, and which they might control and save and use as a mighty power for the removal of the evils which they deplore. So it goes; and the evil expands, until we are told, no doubt truly, that the production which in the year 1862 was said to have been 16,000,000 gallons of distilled liquors and 62,000,000 gallons of beer, perhaps an exceptionally unproductive year, was, according to the just-published report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, 69,000,000 gallons of distilled spirits, 19,000,000 barrels or 700,000,000 gallons of malt liquors, and over 2,000,000 gallons of wine, all gone into the consumption of this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885. Really we do not seem to be getting ahead very rapidly, according to these figures; but I suspect that the returns of 1862 were imperfect. There is, however, I think, no doubt that the consumption of all kinds of intoxicating liquors has increased quite as rapidly as population in the United States during the last quarter of a century. This is especially true of malt liquors and perhaps of wines. I believe the rum traffic now to be the great menacing danger of America and of civilization.

REVIEW OF PROGRESS DURING THE LAST CENTURY.

The thought which I have in mind for discussion upon this occasion is embodied in the question, What had we better do? I do not assume that I can answer this question. I can state what seems to my vision to be the better way—that is all that any man can do—and the Supreme Ruler of events will direct the pathway of action, as He has from the beginning until now.

Sir, we stand upon an elevation to-day at the end of the first century of the temperance reform. It is an hour of retrospect and of forecast. Something is revealed by the lamp of experience for the guidance of our feet in the century to come. What has been done in the last hundred years? By what means has it been accomplished? What remains to do, and by what means and methods shall the remaining work be wrought? In the first place, during the century just closed we have learned that the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage—simply as a beverage and not as a medicine—is an evil always useless and hurtful. We have learned that alcohol is a poison and not a food; that it is not useful to the human system save under circumstances when a poison may be useful; never to produce or improve health only as it may remove an obstruction to the natural and proper action of this vital machine so fearfully and wonderfully made. Science has become our ally and fortifies our cause impregnably with her demonstrations. The Byronic phrase, "Rum and true religion," was hardly blasphemous sixty years ago.

A venerable Christian once told me that when he was six years old his sainted mother became converted and joined the church in one of the best towns of my own State. Among his most vivid recollections was the memory of the visit of the distinguished divine who came on two or more occasions to his father's house for the purpose of testing the theological soundness as well as practical piety of his mother during the probationary period which preceded her admission to the church, every such interview in the discharge of his sacred calling being opened by a liberal drink of New England rum, administered by the hands of the candidate for admission. It was not only the way of the world, but it was the way of the church. Drinking which did not result in actual helplessness was hardly considered an offense, while as a social custom its indulgence was as universal as it was delightful, and its dangerous tendency was overlooked most strangely and wickedly by the great majority of the best of men. Now the Christian ministry, Protestant and Catholic, is almost a unit against rum. The medical profession is against rum; the judiciary is against rum; science, religion, the learned professions as a whole, which one hundred years ago were for rum, are now against it. The substantial press of the country is against it; intelligence, conscience, all the great forces and agencies of society are against it.

Whenever and wherever any of them advocate its cause the work is accompanied by a concession of the evil, and the hypocritical or ignorant pretense that it can best be suppressed by some policy which increases the evil. You can not conceive of a political platform which advocates or justifies the liquor traffic because it does any good. All opposition to the evil is deprecated, or its license is sought only upon the ground that stringent and prohibitory measures increase the evil, or that such invasions of personal liberty are dangerous to individuals or to the State. It seems to be forgotten that the very essence of all government is an invasion of personal liberty to do wrong or injury, and there can be no personal liberty to perform any action hurtful to society and to the State which is beyond the jurisdiction and the power of the government established for the preservation of both. In short, this much, and it is everything in that it is the major premise of the syllogism whose conclusion is the destruction of the traffic, has been established by the agitation of the century just closed, that the manufacture, sale, and use of alcohol as a beverage is the greatest crime and curse of modern times. All the great conservative and preservative forces of society are now arrayed against it. That means its ultimate and inevitable extinction.

There never was an evil which has passed away that was not destroyed by public opinion. There is not, there never will be, an evil which can withstand the assaults of the enlightened condemnation of a free people who suffer from it. Then, Mr. President, we have this impregnable fact and supreme consolation which the past century has bequeathed to us—more precious to humanity than a diadem of morning stars—that the liquor traffic is doomed and shall be destroyed. The demon has been tried and condemned to death in the highest court, the court of public opinion. To us is assigned the work of execution. Let us proceed to perform that duty faithfully, relentlessly, and now.

FORMS WHICH LEGISLATION HAS TAKEN.

For a moment let us consider the means by which the achievements of the past have been won. There seem to be two agencies which influence human action, persuasion and force—the action of individuals upon each other and upon the community by facts and motives addressed to the understanding and to the will, or, in other words, moral suasion, and the will of the community, the result of moral suasion, embodied in law. The law itself becomes in its turn the fortress and re-enforcement of the moral sentiment and opinions of the community; and by the sanctions which belong to its administration and the reverence which a free people must always entertain for the laws which have once been enacted, even when the reasons therefor have become forgotten or obscured in the agitation of fresh issues concerning the public weal, the law preserves and maintains the good to secure which it was enacted. After popular enthusiasm has passed away the enemy comes in again like a flood. Then it is that a vigilant and determined minority can rally under the ægis of an existing law and summon its sanctions as a means of recalling the former acuteness of a now blunted public sentiment, as well as to directly suppress or restrain the evil prohibited.

True it is that when a law is really wrong or by the nature of things has become obsolete, the reason thereof failing, it is impossible for a minority long to enforce it; but on the other hand if the evil remain and the law be right, the fact that it is on the statute-book is a very great advantage, especially in times of declension in public zeal for the right. Both these forces, moral suasion and public law, have been employed in the promotion of the temperance reform during the century past. It is so patent that moral suasion, by education and argument, has been and always must be the great preliminary all-causing and controlling agency in molding public opinion, which alone makes laws and gives permanent efficiency after their enactment, that for my present purpose I need not press its importance to the future as well as the past further upon your attention. I wish to speak, however, for a few moments upon the character of the legal enactments which in the past have been relied upon to promote the temperance reform. These have been by license or by prohibition of the sale for immediate consumption, either by the State or by some subdivision of the State, as a town or county, by authority derived from the State. The General Government has never passed, as it might do, for the District of Columbia and the Territories, any form whatever of prohibitory law against the rum traffic.

All license laws are based upon the idea of taxation for revenue, and imply a sanction of the trade as well as participation in the profits thereof by the whole people, who, for the general good, alone can exercise the taxing power. A license gives the right to sell in consideration of the fee paid to the people, and prohibits such right to those who will not or are not permitted to pay the tax. The same sum imposed as a penalty for selling in violation of a prohibitory law is payable for each and every sale, and there is no consent to the act on the part of the public whatever. The fact that the penalty, like the fee for the license, goes into the public treasury is of no consequence at all.

These license laws, or excise laws, although for a while they may restrain, are of no ultimate help to the temperance reform. They are, in fact, one of the chief defenses of the traffic, and whether high or low are of most pernicious final tendency. They bribe the public conscience, they bewilder the public intelligence, and they never are long enforced in those provisions which are sometimes honestly, but more generally with bad design, attached for the apparent purpose of restriction. The licensee soon violates all these restrictions, and then is as liable to prosecution at the instigation of the common seller without any license at all as is the latter at the suit of the licensee himself. One violator of law will not prosecute another violator of law.

Then where is the motive for prosecution on his part, the creation of which is said to be the great excellence of the license law as a means of regulating the trade? It has disappeared and the license law is no law at all in its practical effect, save only as it does the general coffers fill with the price of blood. So far as it promotes the gilded saloon by closing the low groggery I have only to say the latter is far more respectable and a lesser curse in the community than the former. Ten groggeries will not work the ruin wrought by a single palace of strong drink. Every lover of his country should vote for the groggery as against the gilded saloon. The license law, high or low, is no device of the temperance reform nor of the temperance agitation. It was not developed by it. The moral sentiment of the community had nothing to do with its origin, nor, unless under a grievous misapprehension, with its present support. It has existed ever since there was a traffic, and for the sole purpose of getting money out of it for the public pocket, and might just as well be applied to the commission of any other offense against the public welfare by those who would pay for the liberty as to the trade in rum. A license law seems to me to be radically wrong in principle, pernicious in practice, and, so far as I know, no such law has ever imposed any real or permanent restraint upon the gigantic evil with which civilization is now called upon to contend. There remains to be considered only the State and local option laws, which have assumed to prohibit the sale of alcohol for drinking purposes. The amendments to State constitutions have as yet become hardly an operative force.

These prohibitory laws have partially succeeded and they have partially failed. Why have they so far succeeded? Because they were founded upon the right principle, and hence rallied conscience and humanity to their support. Why have they so far failed? Because they were, save in the principle involved, in no just sense prohibitory laws at all. They did not and they do not and they can not, when enacted by a State only, prevent the traffic in intoxicating liquor. The liquor traffic comprises vastly more than the retail sale, or even the wholesale and retail transaction. The liquor traffic is practically independent in a large degree of any State, and in an absolute degree of most of the States. True, if the drinking habit were not so powerful and universal, it might be somewhat different. But now every little hamlet, not to say almost every house, sends forth its cry and holds out its money to the whole land and to the whole earth, begging for strong drink. The supply can be made everywhere, and under the protection of the armies and navies of the nation, and of the world if it come from beyond the seas; alcohol, in the original packages, can be rolled into every cabin as well as every palace in the country. But how inadequate and what a misnomer as a prohibitory law is that which can only forbid the sale to the consumer in a State, and how much more so one which is operative only for the same purpose in a county or town. Even the State constitutional amendments, which prohibit the manufacture as well as the sale, must fail—inevitably fail. In the very nature of things there is and there can be no adequate and permanent remedy but in a national constitutional prohibitory law. It will be time enough to cry that prohibition does not prohibit when prohibition has been tried.

The State of Maine has very greatly improved the condition of her people by the operation of her quasi prohibitory law; so of New Hampshire and Vermont. Ask any old resident of any one of these States and he will tell you yea. A politician with a flask in his pocket or a liquor-drummer from Boston might bewail the failure of the prohibitory law in those States; but these laws in their practical operation are miracles of good; and considering the existing appetite, which antedated the law and the existence of which was the cause of the attempted reform, the enormous and concentrated capital and action protected by nearly all State and the overwhelming power of national law which makes the stuff anywhere and carries it everywhere, I say deliberately that not even the law against murder is any better enforced than these poor halting paragraphs of infantile legislation, nicknamed prohibitory laws.

THE SITUATION NOW AND ITS REQUIREMENTS.

We have been one hundred years convincing science, religion, the professions, the judges who administer the criminal laws, and the great mass of the people that alcohol is poison, and that its manufacture, sale, and use is the organized destruction of individuals and of the body-politic. The nature of the legislation which is to remove and renovate all is now to be considered and enacted and enforced. Whoever believes that the destruction of the liquor traffic is not a national issue has made a mistake. Whoever does not comprehend that the removal of that evil is a duty which the nation is about to perform fails to discern the signs of the times. Everywhere the question is up. In the North and in the South; in Massachusetts, New York, and Ohio; throughout the West and Southwest, and all over the sunny South; in every State the agitation is irrepressible, because the evil is gigantic and omnipresent. It is impossible to suppress these convulsive efforts of the social system to free itself of this foreign and destructive element. It must be eliminated or society will die. It is of no use to cry peace, for there is no peace. Peace without a complete cure would be the most dangerous symptom. It would indicate the destruction of vital power, presaging decline and death.

The American people must do something. What shall we do?

The Washingtonian movement swept over the country some forty years ago like a tidal wave from the sea of life. That movement was moral suasion in its most powerful manifestation. The great wave subsided and the enemy came in once more like a flood of fire, and there be those who believe that the last state was worse than the first. Was, then, the Washingtonian movement wrong? Nay, verily, but it was incomplete. The tremendous public opinion which the discussion evoked should have been crystallized into the enduring forms of State and national law. The triumph then would have been complete and the work secure. We have at last learned something, and we are still learning more and more, that it is what we save that makes us rich. Deposit all savings in the solid banks of constitutional and statutory legislation, State and national, and the liquor traffic will not pauperize this generation of laborers in the field of temperance reform. We shall have a most precious inheritance to leave to the generation which comes after us. We shall not repeat the mistake of our fathers. Whatever we advance we shall hold by the authority of law. The one all-essential thing to be done is to put forth every effort to secure political action. All political action is partisan political action where there is opposition. State political action is important, but national political action is all-important.

I have endeavored to indicate why it is indispensable, and the only action which can render that of the States either permanent or efficient. If either should wait for the other, by all means let the States wait on the nation; let all the people of all the States concentrate upon one grand effort to amend the national Constitution so as to prohibit the manufacture, the sale, the importation, the exportation, and the transportation of alcoholic beverages anywhere within the limits of the national domain. That is the way to rescue and preserve the States. It is easy thus to create the popular sentiment which must exist within the States in order that legislation may be secured in their several jurisdictions. The evil is national, and the war which saves the nation must be fought by the nation. The Constitution, now the charter of the rum power, is to be amended by securing a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress, submitting a proposition for that purpose to the States for their action, and its approval by three-fourths of the entire number of the States. The President has nothing to do about the submission of the proposed amendment to the States, because he legislates only by veto, which is nullified by a two-thirds vote of the two Houses, and a two-thirds vote must be secured in its favor in the first place. Between the submission to the States and ratification by three-fourths of the States a considerable period might, undoubtedly would, elapse, but we should succeed in the end. All the energy of the reform throughout the nation could be concentrated upon the States one after another, and I sincerely believe that, once before the people, we can complete the work in five years' time. Nationally nothing comparatively important can be done now but to get two-thirds of both Houses of Congress to vote to submit the proposed amendment to the people. It is nothing to us whether a Senator or Representative be a Democrat or a Republican, a St. John man or a Greenbacker, whether he is for license or prohibition, provided that he will vote to take the sense of the people upon such a proposed amendment. That is what we want of him now. Only this and nothing more.

What honest man can say that this request is unreasonable? What political party which cares for political freedom can deny to the millions who desire to be heard upon this tremendous question of the amendment of the Constitution of the country, so as to preserve the existence of our nation and of our civilization before the only tribunal which can decide it, the exercise of this fundamental right? We ask no man or party now to pledge himself to advocate the amendment before the people; we will take care of that when we get to the people. But we demand that he shall give to us, and that political parties shall give to us, a chance to be heard in the proper forum—the forum of the people—which is our right. It is our concern, not now his or theirs, whether we are defeated or successful when we reach the people of the several States. This is the temperance issue now arising in the whole land, and until this is decided no party, man, or faction can project one of comparatively serious importance into national politics. There is temperance sentiment enough to choose a two-thirds vote, in favor of submitting such an amendment to the people, in the very next House of Representatives, provided it would go into the primaries and the conventions of one or both of the great political parties now existing, and who are sure for years to divide chiefly between them the membership of both Houses, and then support in good faith at the polls the man who should have been pledged to submit the amendment to the people of the States. This amendment might be thus submitted to the people in 1888, or at the latest by 1890, and the amendment itself become a part of the law of the land before the close of the century. But, sir, how long before a third party can elect a single representative against the old parties upon this issue or any other? When shall we get our two-thirds vote? When shall we get the Senate, if we postpone all until one or the other of the great political parties is destroyed and its rival is in a minority with the triumphant prohibitionists in control of the Capitol? You and I will die without the sight.

It seems to be the fashion among our third-party friends to find all the fault possible with the Republican party and to excuse the Democratic party, which is its only real antagonist for the control of national affairs. A Republican might retort that this is natural and all right if the Republican party sustains the same relation to politics which the church does to religion. If any party does good we must look to the Republican party for it; and it is, I suppose, a consciousness and concession of this fact which enables public opinion to hold the Republicans to that higher standard of conduct in politics which in morals and religion is enforced by sinners against the church. We must accept this responsibility or abandon "the grand old party" and return to the beggarly elements of the Democratic world. That we can not do. Therefore it is that the Republican party must and will promote this great temperance reform in that way and with such rapidity of aggressive action as shall be deemed consistent with successful results. As others speak from their several standpoints, so do I from that of a Republican who is in the party and proposes to stay there. If I can accomplish nothing in the party I know very well that I can nothing out of it. I helped to create the Republican party. I have in my humble way participated in its great deeds. I have shed my little share of blood in its career of glory, and there I am at home. Parties can not be made to order, and this great organic force is ours. I realize its tremendous power, and believe that under God it holds in its hands the better fate and higher destiny of America and of the world.

Flaws and specks there be on the sun; they would be invisible but for his own supreme effulgence. What light save his own could reveal his imperfections?

This great work is easier than it seems. I made a serious effort to secure the adoption of a proper plank for the purpose in the Republican platform at Chicago in 1884, and draughted a resolution to that end, which was introduced at my request by Hon. E. H. Rollins, my late colleague in the Senate, and referred to the committee upon resolutions. In its terms it was perfectly satisfactory to Miss Willard, the president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the chief agency in all this temperance reform, simply pledging the party to take the sense of the people upon the amendment of the national Constitution, as I have already indicated. Miss Willard talked for thirteen minutes to the committee like an angel from heaven, and we retired. The committee gave no sign, and the platform was as dumb as a block of wood, and the party was beaten, as I fear it will be every time in the future until that plank is inserted along with other great issues which concern the welfare of the American people and mankind.

But you are not to infer from all this that no one on that committee was in favor of the adoption of the proposition. A member told me that many of the committee were for its adoption there and then, and more than a majority favored the proposed amendment in principle and believed that by 1888 the Republican party would go to the people with the resolution for submission to the people in its platform. I think the failure to do so then was the one fatal mistake in that campaign. There was no trouble with the German vote. Half of the Republican German vote is for such an amendment to-day, and the all-important industrial issues would have kept the whole of that intelligent suffrage with the Republican party so far as it ever is with us in any campaign. God and conscience would have been for us, and they count for something in a close campaign. The whole camp-meeting element of the country would have been aroused for Blaine and Logan, and we should have carried all the Northern and more than one of the Southern States.

No more such mistakes should be made. The working people of this country are naturally with the Republican party, and substantially the whole temperance vote will be with the party which adopts this issue the next time. Should there be wisdom in the councils of the Republican party the division of forces fighting for a common cause will be over, and for the all-sufficient reason that the Democratic party is on the other side, and that there are but two sides to this temperance question possible, the right side and the wrong side; the Republican party, if true to itself and to its high mission, will in the next general election favor taking the popular sense upon this all-important proposition. I can but hope that many individual Democrats will cast their influence and their suffrage in the same direction. It ought not to be a party question; there should be unanimity in a matter like this, but perhaps we can not hope so much as this for our country. It would be the millennium.

Let the temperance people of this country consider how the labor organizations, with their one great purpose—the amelioration of the condition of those whose lives are spent in manual toil, by dictating nominations inside the two great parties to which they belong and one of which must always succeed—have obtained in the past and are certain in the immediate future to obtain in the nation and in the States legislation most promotive of their welfare.

I have thus endeavored to answer the question, what had better next be done in the temperance reform. Every man, woman, and child is interested in the answer; future generations depend upon that answer for their destiny of weal or of woe. Without undervaluing local and State agitation and legislation, let us concentrate every energy and effort upon the one great work of securing the submission of a proposed national amendment to the people of the States. Then we shall have before us a period of agitation in the States for its ratification there. That accomplished, we shall have regenerated the Constitution, and the tremendous powers of the nation will soon throttle this giant Despair, who is feeding by day and by night upon the bodies and souls of our countrymen. Let us wisely conserve our forces and our votes. Let us be misled by no false analogies between this struggle and the great transition which destroyed the slave power. The analogy is an unfortunate one, which can only be realized and made pertinent by consummation in a terrible war. Peaceful agencies, if wisely employed, will accomplish the grand result. Numerous issues essential to the public welfare are always pending, and great parties which are intrusted with national control must embrace and simultaneously deal with them all. We most influence those with whom we are in harmonious relations. The man who owns an interest in the machine gains nothing if he throws it away, especially if it be a good one, and he who abandons the church has a poor chance to reform it. Stay in the ship and help to sail her to the port of joy.

But, after all, each man must decide for himself the method of his action. Let us, however, at least concentrate on the things to be done, that the tremendous forces now dissipated in the sand may become a mighty torrent of beneficence and sweep away the nation's curse. Abating no whit of effort in the way of instruction or persuasion, increasing the activity of all the agencies now employed to influence individuals, municipal organizations, and States, let us lift up the mighty banner of national constitutional prohibition. Let us ourselves contemplate the subject from this higher elevation.

The nation refuses to permit the importation of criminals; then let us prohibit the importation of the cause of criminals and of crimes; We refuse to receive the paupers and outcasts of surrounding nations; then let us repel from our borders the primal source of poverty, wretchedness, and despair. What we refuse to receive from abroad, shall we continue to manufacture and export? What we refuse or ought to refuse to import or export because of its malignant and destructive work, shall we as a nation continue to manufacture, distribute, and consume among ourselves? Shall we longer divide and destroy the result of our most zealous efforts among the people and in the States by permitting the national Constitution and national power, within their sphere the supreme law of the land, to protect the manufacture, the distribution, and the wholesale trade in this merchandise of death? Nay, verily, if the new century is to complete the temperance reform there is but one way to accomplish it—national prohibition must be our watchword.

Let this issue be carried into every caucus and primary for choice of delegates and into every Congressional convention of every party which has any chance of success at the next Congressional election—the election of 1886. Let the same issue be made in the caucuses which nominate the Legislatures who make Senators of the United States, and thus choose members of both Houses of Congress, who will demand for the people whom they represent the opportunity to be heard in the forum of the States for the amendment and regeneration of the Constitution of the country, so that this sacred instrument shall become the warrant for destruction, and no longer the charter of life and liberty, to the most terrible curse and crime of civilization. This seems to me to be what we had better do next.

Sir, I will beg your indulgence to repeat the recapitulation and conclusion of my remarks upon the joint resolution made in the House of Representatives ten years since, which constitute a summary of considerations to which I respectfully ask the attention of the Senate and of the country.

RECAPITULATION.

"Sir, I only wish further to say that by the indulgence of the House I have thus at great but I hope not at unnecessary length endeavored to call the attention of Congress and of the country to the vast and increasing public evils which exist in the land, whose origin lies in the excessive use of that most powerful poison, known as alcohol. I have not dealt in specific instances, but in masses of fact, as they have been gathered and accumulated here and there by the statistician, the census-taker, the official investigator, and most of all by that noble profession which comprises so many of the ablest and best of men—a profession whose theory is the gospel of man's physical and mental nature, and whose practice is philanthropy applied to the details of all human
